OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau said today that he will not negotiate any form of separation with Quebec or any other province from the rest of Canada.

"We have only one mandate," he told a hushed Commons following the election Monday of a majority Parti Quebecois government in Quebec.

"That is to govern the whole country."

The current Liberal government "has no mandate to negotiate any form of separation with any province."

Trudeau was replying to Opposition Leader Joe Clark, who opened the Commons proceedings by asking what the prime minister planned to do to pacify investors worried about the election of the separatist Parti Quebecois.

The prime minister replied that his government "is committed to an unseparated Canada . . . a Canada that is undivided."

On Monday night Premier-elect Rene Levesque told thousands of cheering supporters in an emotional speech "we hope in friendship with our fellow citizens of Canada to give ourselves a country which is Quebec."

His supporters responded with cries of "Quebec for the Quebecers" and some of them broke into a love song by Gilles Vigneault.

In his victory speech, Levesque said his "clear majority" enables the PQ to hold a referndum on whether the province should separate from Canada and become a republic.

"We'll work as hard as we can to make Quebec a country for all Quebecers who live in it and love it," he added.

At least half of the 22 Liberal cabinet ministers who entered Monday's election, including Premier Robert Bourassa, lost their seats, paving the way for a leadership convention within the next few months.

Parti Quebecois	66	6
Liberal	27	102
Union Nationale	11
Creditiste	1	2
Popular National Party	1

The Pequistes captured about 41 per cent of the popular vote while the Liberals won about 34 per cent.

Lang Used Gov't Jet For Party' Flight

OTTAWA (CP) — Government records show that Transport Minister Otto Lang took a group of aides, reporters and public relations people on a government airplane from Saskatoon to Regina in April, 1975, to attend a party given by his brother-in-law, Saskatchewan Liberal Tony Merchant.

New Democrat Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville), referring to the trip, asked Monday in the Commons whether the government planned to tighten rules governing the use by cabinet ministers of publicly-owned executive aircraft.

Prime Minister Trudeau reiterated that the planes are only to be used "when the public duty of a minister is involved." Those rules had been followed for the last 20 years.

Government travel records show that the cost of the April, 1975, trip — from Ottawa to Saskatoon to Regina and back to the capital — was $10,222. Lang took several National Press Club members — including some in the club's band — to Saskatoon for a press party.

The group then made a trip to Regina to attend Merchant's party.

Meanwhile in Saskatoon, Anthony Abbott, consumer and corporate affairs minister, said it was unfair to blame Lang for spending money which would still be spent even if the government plane stayed on the ground.

Bennett Hasn't Opinion

Times News Services

Premier Bill Bennett said today he has no opinion to offer on the Quebec election until he studies the results.

Bennett said he will go to a provincial premiers' conference in December and at that time, he and his colleagues will get a chance to discuss Quebec's position and the future of Canada.

The premier said he wants to hear Rene Levesque's position from the new premier himself.

"To many 'experts' have been putting too many interpretations on too many things," Bennett said.

Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm said if Quebec separates, it will help B.C.'s welfare problems.

Vander Zalm has complained in the past that Quebec was sending its unemployed to B.C. to collect welfare.

"If in fact they do separate, they'll have to get a passport to travel here which will certainly make things tougher and probably cut down on some of the things we've been concerned about," the minister said.

"Separation could help by cutting down on some of the problems we faced in the past."

NDP leader Dave Barrett today sent a telegram to Levesque saying that all people in Canada can be friends and remain as a nation even with differences of opinion.

"What you hope for the people of Quebec is what we all hope for the people of Canada," Barrett said in the telegram.

When historians get around to analyzing the Parti Quebecois win, they might well decide it was a day when Canadian confederation was strengthened rather than weakened, Progressive Conservative leader Scott Wallace said.

"That is the gut feeling I have about Rene Levesque. Maybe I'm dreaming. I hope not," he said.

He believes the 54-year-old separatist leader is a highly intelligent man who is much more moderate than he appears to be, Wallace added.

"He tells things accurately and honestly, which is something we haven't received from other Quebec leaders," he said.

Most other provincial premiers shared an observation by Ontario Premier William Davis that Monday's election "does not constitute a defeat for Canada."

Nova Scotia Premier Gerald Regan said the PQ election victory should not be taken as a sign that Quebec is on the verge of leaving Con-

Blacks Reject Formula

Times News Services

GENEVA — Black nationalist leaders Robert Mugabe and Joshua Nkomo today rejected a British compromise timetable for black majority rule in Rhodesia, forcing early adjournment of the Geneva peace talks.

Mugabe and Nkomo, partners in a "patriotic front," also said Britain's failure to set a binding date for independence meant it had "no intention to transfer power to the true representatives of the people."

Ivor Richard, the British conference chairman, adjourned the talks after the "patriotic front" statement was presented and did not set a time for another meeting.

Rhodesian foreign minister Pieter van der Byl, leaving the meeting, said Mugabe and Nkomo had made "all sorts of unreasonable and unfounded allegations against the chairman."

British officials said also they had "no idea at all" what would now happen.

Mozambique said today airborne Rhodesian forces attacking across the border have lost seven planes but captured a Mozambiquan army base in a battle that has lasted at least four days.

In Salisbury, a communique today from security forces headquarters reported Rhodesian troops have killed 29 guerrillas in the past 24 hours, but made no mention of action across the border.

Dollar Dips In Vote Wake

Times News Services

The Canadian dollar dropped sharply and then rallied in early foreign exchange dealings in New York today in what traders privately interpreted as a reaction to the Parti Quebecois victory in the Quebec election.

The dollar dropped slightly more than a half-cent in early trading to $1.0175 U.S. from Monday's closing quotation of $1.0230, but rallied within the first hour to $1.0210, just slightly below the Monday close.

A Bank of Canada spokesman in Ottawa said the fluctuation was "not a huge move at all."

A Royal Bank of Canada spokesman said the shifting value of the dollar was "quite normal after an election," adding that it would take a few days to determine the effect of the PQ win on the exchange rate.

Most of Canada's business leaders also reacted with a nervous calm today to the PQ sweep.

The reaction ranged from that of T. J. Bell, chairman of Abitibi Paper Co. Ltd., who said any threat of Quebec separation amounts to "economic chaos," to that of Allen Lambert, chairman of the Toronto Dominion Bank, who announced it will be business-as-usual despite the emergence of the independence-minded Pequistes headed by Rene Levesque.

However, whisky multi-millionaire Charles Bronfman, who threatened Monday to take his baseball and business interests and leave Quebec if the separatist party won the election, was suffering morning-after effects today.

"I over-reacted," Bronf-

Tankers Planned

SEATTLE (AP) — The Exxon Corp. Monday announced plans to build two new 165,000 deadweight ton tankers at a cost of more than $65 million apiece to carry Alaska crude oil from Alaska's North Slope to ports in California.

MANAUS, Brazil (UPI) — A bus carrying voters to the polls tumbled into the piranha-infested Urubu River Monday. Police said 38 persons drowned or were eaten by the fish.

U.S. Output Falls

WASHINGTON (WP) — The output of U.S. factories, mines and utilities fell 0.5 per cent last month, reflecting strikes by automobile workers and a continuing slowdown in economic growth. (See also Page 11.)

Japan Scraps Plans For B.C. Steel Mill

Plans for a joint B.C.-Japanese steel mill for the province have been scrapped, Economic Development Minister Don Phillips announced Monday.

Phillips told a news conference in Tokyo the decision resulted from talk with NKK, a leading Japanese steel maker. Company officials expressed concern over the production cost increases and a decline in world-wide demand for steel products.

Studies on the steel mill were started early in 1974, and possible sites had been narrowed down to Prince George and Kitimat.

The mill would have had an annual production capacity of four million tons of crude steel.

Japanese steel industry officials said the proposed capacity was much larger than necessary and that production costs, considering the mill's location, could have been 20 per cent higher than elsewhere.

The cancellation follows a similar decision earlier this year in which Japanese steelmakers withdrew from participation in development of a mill in Brazil.

Phillips and the B.C. delegation have spent about nine days in Japan and return later today.

Phillips' visit to Japan also included talks with government and industry officials on increased coal exports from B.C.

The minister said Monday, in a telephone interview from Tokyo, he could make no firm announcement on coal sales until he discusses the issue with the B.C. cabinet and the federal government.

He said he has "no reason to believe" that coal sales to Japan would be less than 15 million tons per year over the next few years.

B.C. currently sells about nine million tons per year to Japan.

YULE BONUS HIKED $5

The B.C human resources department has increased the Christmas bonus for welfare recipients by $5.

The bonus for a single person on welfare goes from $10 to $15 and the bonus for a family has been increased from $20 to $25.

Teacher Talks Break Off

The 1977 contract will now have to be settled by an arbitration board.

The two groups could not agree on a salary settlement. The board offered an eight per cent increase. Teachers were asking for 11.5 per cent.

The school district has already appointed local laywer Noel Paget as its representative on the three-member arbitration board.

A binding arbitration settlement will have to be made before Dec. 31.

Board vice-chairman Susan Price said the board was "really disappointed" when it learned at Monday night's meeting talks had broken off.

She said negotiations had been going along fairly well when "suddenly there was this bolt from the blue" — the request for 11.5 per cent.

No Way To Block Oil Hike

VIENNA (UPI) — U.S. efforts to avert an increase in the world oil price have little chance of success, according to sources close to the world's major oil producers.

The sources said economic experts of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries will recommend an oil price increase to OPEC's ministerial meeting Dec. 15 at Qatar.

OPEC's economic commission convened Monday for a one-week conference to prepare a report for the oil ministers.

"They can only make recommendations," an OPEC source said. "The decisions will be taken by the ministers."

There was little doubt among oil experts that the economic commission of the 13-member organization will recommend an increase in the oil price that has remained frozen in the last two ministerial meetings.

"The price of oil must be maintained by linking it to the price of manufactured goods," one source said.

Times News Services

VANCOUVER — Bitter floor fighting erupted Monday at the opening session of the B.C. Federation of Labor's annual convention here as delegates challenged an executive call for continued militancy.

A roll-call vote today on future policy was expected to accentuate the growing rift.

The challengers, including the International Woodworkers of America, the B.C. Government Employees' Union and the United Steelworkers of America, lost a standing vote on the issue Monday, 437-352, but managed to force today's roll-call vote on policy direction.

The challengers took issue with the conclusion of a policy report Monday which said in part:

"We must continue the pattern followed in recent years by this federation of endeavoring, through militant industrial action and an improved program of political action, to fight for working people . . ."

Jack Munro, IWA western regional president and a leader of the challenging faction, said "the image of the trade union movement is in the gutter right now" under present leadership.

"We have got to correct that image," he added. "We want to take our rightful place in society. We want to speak with some god-damned appearance of being responsible people."

Munro toll the 847 delegates at the meeting that seven of the 16-member executive council had voted against the report and wanted their opposition listed.

The seven are Munro; John Fryer, general secretary of the BCGEU; Mike Kramer and Len Stair of the Canadian Union of Public Employees; Jack Hill of the steelworkers and Earl Foxcroft and Erich Ewert of the IWA.

Munro's remarks came after Len Guy, secretary-treasurer of the federation, said: "It is vitally important that this convention give a clear mandate to the officers as to the way attacks (by the federal and provincial governments) are to be fought, whether to continue to place our primary reliance on united industrial action, supplemented by an effective political action program, or whether to turn to some sort of attempt to find favor with those governments."

Observers see today's roll-call policy vote as an indicator of Friday's balloting for treasurer's post. Guy, the incumbent, is being challenged by Art Kube, regional political education director for the Canadian Labor Congress who favors a more sophisticated approach to federation policy.

Poll Delights Opposition

However, he said: "It's back to the drawing board for everyone so far as the constitution is concerned."

Premier Frank Moores of Newfoundland said future federal government negotiations with Quebec are absolutely critical.

"The worst thing that could happen is if the federal government decided to try to buy off Quebec to show how great Canada was, pump in money far out of proportion to what other places get," he said.

In St. John's, Moores also said the constitutional question has been set back although there is a meeting in Ottawa in December "theoretically, on the Constitution."

"Well, how in the hell can you have a meaningful discussion on the Constitution when one guy doesn't even believe there should be one?" he asked.

The Parti Quebecois prompted widly differing reaction among members of Parliament in Ottawa.

While leaders offered their straight, and formal, views to the media the MPs watching results in their respective lobbies reacted instantly and openly as election results rolled in.

In the opposition lobby there was no despair.

"They are voting for honesty," declared Alvin Hamilton (PC—Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain). "They are fed up with Bourassa."

Hamilton, who dealt with PQ leader Rene Levesque when Levesque was a member of the Lesage Quebec government and Hamilton a member of the Diefenbaker Conservative government, proclaimed the PQ leader, "an honest man."

Neither Hamilton, nor any other MP seemed to regard separatism as an immediate threat.

This brings the crunch question five years closer," assessed Doug Alkenbrack (PC—Frontenac-Lennox and Addington).

"So much for Trudeau as the saviours of Canada," commented Marcel Lambert (PC—Edmonton West).

"Ten years ago separatims was hardly heard of. After eight years of Trudeau look at the results."

Stanley Knowles (NDP—Winnipeg North Centre) insisted "That's not a vote for separatism, it's a vote for a change." Word that Premier Bourassa was going down to defeat brough shoputs of glee.

"That makes ie easier for Bryce Mackasey," quipped a Tory backbencher.

He had no doubt that Mackasey, until recently the federal Consumer and Corporate Affairs Minister, would seek the Liberal leadership in the province.

Opposition leader Joe Clark said the Progressive Conservatives now would likely abandon their plans for a major rebuilding campaign in Quebec.

A resurgence of Conservative strength in Quebec "is not probable" because of the renewed strength of the Union Nationale which won 11 seats in the election, he said.

All federal parties will have to assess their positions in light of the election outcome, Clark told reporters.

He urged Canadians "to avoid any sense of panic" and said the election was "a test of the record of the government of the day."

Ed Broadbent, leader of the New Democratic Party, said the election should be viewed as a desire by voters for "an honest government" dedicated to "serious economic reform."

Andre Fortin, leader of the federal Social Credit party, said the vote was a rebuff for 'a rotten government."

Former Conservative Prime Minister John Diefenbaker said he is not concerned about the election of the Parti Quebecois.

The vote was a condemnation of Prime Minister Trudeau and the way he has divided the country "as never before," Diefenbaker added.

The defeat of former federal Liberal minister Jean Marchand was a "kick in the posterior" to Trudeau.

Addressing a group of Jewish businessmen on the eve of the provincial election Monday, Bronfman had said: "I see the destruction of my country, the destruction of the Jewish community ... it's going to be pure, absolute hell."

Donald W. McNaughton, president of Canadian Schenley Distilleries Ltd. of Montreal, called for an immediate referendum to find out "once and for all" where the Quebec people stand on separation from Canada.

"The talk of separation has been a continuing menace to business and the overall good of Canada for a number of years," he said. "Now is the time to find out."

G. Arnold Hart, chairman of the Bank of Montreal, said he feels "quite relaxed with the Parti Quebecoiis in power."

"The Bank of Montreal is a Canadian-chartered bank," he said. "Rene Levesque may have his plans, but the rest of Canada will have something to say about that."

British Columbia business leaders also indicated that the PQ victory will have no immediate adverse effect on this province's economy.

Trevor Pilley, president of the Bank of British Columbia, said in an interview it appears it will be at least two years before the new government holds a referendum on separation.

"It's a very complex situation but I don't see the result of the election having any immediate effect on B.C.," he said.

Pilley also said he does not believe there will be any immediate move by large businesses to leave Quebec because of the new government.

Bob Matthew, managing director of the Mining Association of B.C., said the election result could have some adverse effect on Canada on an international basis.

"But as far as B.C. is concerned I can't see any immediate effect and if there is any it will be very slight," he said.

William Hamilton, president of the Employers' Council of B.C., said it was early to make a definite assessment of the election result.

"I would say the effect on B.C. business would be minimal but there could be major uncertainties as far as Canada is concerned it is international dealings," Hamilton said.

Wilfred Mandry, president of Canadian Industries Ltd., predicted only a few industries may pull out of Quebec but not the major ones.

"The problem is that the Parti Quebecois has been fairly guarded as to what their policies might be. Perhaps all we'll see is a different set of problems and very few cures."

Court OK's Newspaper Ownership

OTTAWA (CP) — The Supreme Court of Canada ruled today that Irving ownership of New Brunswick's five English-language daily newspapers was not detrimental to the people of the province.

The country's highest court upheld the decision of the New Brunswick Appeal Court, which last year quashed monopoly convictions against F. G. Irving Ltd. of Saint John and three associated publishing companies. That decision also cancelled fines totalling $150,000 and an order to sell two Irving papers in Moncton.

Today's Supreme Court judgment ended five years of litigation that began when federal combines officers laid monopoly charges last in 1971. The case was argued in three New Brunswick courts before coming to Ottawa.

Suicide Bid By Killer, Fiance Fails

Gilmore, 35, who wanted to die Monday before a firing squad, was found in his cell at Utah state prison "not breathing properly."

At about the same time Miss Barrett, 20, was discovered by a neighbor at her apartment in Springville, about 30 miles south of the prison, with two empty sleeping pill vials beside her.

Beirut Guns Silent In Syrians' Wake

By STUART AUERBACH
Washington Post

Syrian tanks and bulldozers, acting as the backbone of an Arab peace-keeping force, roared out at dawn to push aside barricades and silence guns that had been firing all night, thus bringing to a close this phase of Lebanon's 19-month-old civil-religious war which has demolished much of this city and killed as many as 40,000 persons.

Still ahead are the major tasks of reconciling the political, social, economic and religious differences that led to the brutal war — a far harder task than merely stopping the shooting.

Illustrating the vast gulf between the different sides in the fighting is the way the Syrians were greeted Monday morning as they entered different sections of the city.

Women in the mostly Moslem leftist-controlled section of west Beirut threw rice and rose water, symbols of celebration, on the Syrian tanks and armored cars as they rolled by. Later in the afternoon, Syrian troops joined hands with Palestinian commandos to dance a merry Arab folk jig to the tune of a piper amid the rubble in front of the main post office building, located in the centre of what once was the commercial heart of Beirut and the Middle East.

But the reception was a good deal cooler in the mostly-Christian rightist-held section of east Beirut, whose leaders had resisted unsuccessfully since Oct. 24 the stationing of any Arab troops in territory they control.

Right-wing Phalangist militiamen, still in uniform but without the automatic rifles they always used to carry, looked on sullenly Monday morning as the might of the Syrian army, its Russian-made tanks and armored cars bristling with troops whose weapons continually scanned the streets and rooftops of the city.

At one point in the suburb of Ain Rummaneh, a rightist-controlled suburb of Beirut, Phalangist forces refused a Syrian order to take down a road block. The Syrian officer calmly told them if they didn't obey, his tanks would roll over them and their roadblock. They moved.

The Syrians put on a massive display of force Monday, even greater than last Wednesday when they swept to the outskirts of Beirut from mountain villages they controlled since entering the war last June on the side of the Palestinians.

An estimated 9,000 troops and 450 pieces of armor was involved in Monday's move, and by nightfall the Syrians had taken positions at key intersections and government buildings in both sectors of Beirut.

With Beirut under its undisputed control, the Syrian Army prepared today to extend its peacemaking grip to the rest of Lebanon.

An Arab League spokesman said plans were being made for other Syrian units of the Arab peacekeeping force to occupy Tripoli and Sidon, Lebanon's second and third largest cities and both Moslem strongholds, before the end of the week.

WORK BEGINS ON MAO'S MAUSOLEUM

PEKING (FP) — Hundreds of Chinese workers began tearing up a large section of Tien An Men Square Monday to build a mausoleum where the body of the late Chairman Mao Te-tung will be put on display.

Work began yesterday morning and promised to continue 24 hours a day until Mao's final resting place is completed. Even after last night's earthquake, male and female laborers continued their digging under bright lights which had been installed earlier in the day.

China Rebuffs Soviets

By ROSS H. MUNRO
Special to The Times

PEKING — China has firmly and categorically rejected the conciliatory gestures Moscow has been making to Peking since the death of Chairman Mao Tse-tung on Sept. 9.

The Chinese rebuff was delivered Monday night by Vice-premier Li Hsien-nien in a banquet speech at the Great Hall of the People. The speech was so strongly worded that it sparked a walkout by the ambassadors of the Soviet Union and seven Soviet-bloc countries. The Soviet-bloc walkout came after Vice-Premier Li described the Soviet Union as "wildly ambitious" and denounced its "criminal action" in Africa.

The guest of honor at the banquet was Salah Addin Ahmed Bokassa, president of the Central African Republic, who arrived in Peking yesterday on a state visit.

The diplomats who followed the Soviet ambassador out of the banquet represented Mongolia, Cuba and the Eastern European satellites of Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria, Poland and East Germany. It was a few minutes later, however, that Vice-Premier Li got to his main point which was that the Soviet Union's hopes for Sino-Soviet reconciliation in the wake of Chairman Mao's death are illusory.

The Quebec Election

If Britain won the day on the plains of Abraham so long ago it was a hollow victory which came back to haunt us on Nov. 15, 1976. More than 200 years of indifference, bigotry and an economic order that put French Canadians on the lower steps has resulted in a resounding victory for Rene Levesque's Parti Quebecois. In Canada today many people will use the victory of the separatist party to foster their own aims. Naysayers and western separatists will be vocal in coming months. Parti Quebecois policies will severely test the eroded good will of English Canadians. But Levesque's decisive victory does not signal the imminent balkanization of Canada.

As Prime Minister Trudeau stated Monday night, "They've been granted a mandate to govern, not a mandate to separate." Shrewd politician that he is, Levesque played down the separatist angle, concentrating on economics and corruption in Quebec. The final poll before the election showed that only 18 per cent of Quebecois supported separatism. That means that many voters chose the Parti Quebecois in spite of its separatist plank, not because of it. It is also clear that Levesque's victory rests on slightly more than 40 per cent of the popular vote, indicating about 60 per cent of the electorate is adamantly opposed to separatism.

It would be foolhardy, however, to interpret the results as business as usual in this country. Canada will never be the same after this historic election. Overnight the smug complacency of an insular English Canada has been swept away and replaced with an agonizing period of uncertainty. A Francophone prime minister who came to Ottawa in 1968 with the intention of unifying the country has watched his credibility erode in English Canada this past eight years. Today it is obvious he has little credibility on his home ground. The alternative to Trudeau is an untried Anglophone whose party has negligible support in Quebec.

If these be grim portents for the future of Canada, there are positive aspects to this election too. A large minority of Canadians had the guts to take a risk after years of being given a choice between separatism or various parties of entrenched vested interest. The last minute hysterical threats of the Charles Bronfmans and Liberal hacks who warned of industries leaving Quebec and economic chaos were despicable tactics reminiscent of the 1972 British Columbia election. In effect the Quebec contest was not fought on the separatist issue. It was not a constitutional fight as Robert Bourassa tried to prove. It was the culmination of a class struggle that has been going on in Quebec since the days of Maurice Duplessis. An egalitarian Quebec is more frightening to some elements in this country than the spectre of separatism.

After 109 years of avoiding their history Canadians will now be forced to confront themselves. It will be a catharsis the likes of which this country has never seen. But every country, every philosophy, is forced to test its mettle. Rene Levesque has taken a deliberate, moderate, patient route to a democratic electoral victory. In a similar vein, the prime minister has promised to co-operate with Quebec as long as it abides by the constitution. This is not a time for fear or doubt. Rene Levesque will hold his referendum on confederation. The result must be respected in accord with our democratic traditions. Meanwhile, all thoughtful Canadians must redouble their efforts to forge a new Canada. We must not quit at the eleventh hour.

The Minister Is In? Out?

Remember the character in Joseph Heller's Catch 22 named Major Major? Well, the only time one was allowed in to see the major was when he wasn't there. And here in British Columbia we have a real life analogue to the fictional major. It's none other than our jovial minister of economic development, Don Phillips. You see, good old Don used to like to thrust his hands deep in his pockets and jaw with the folks in the press gallery, just like he does around his up country car dealership.

But then Don became the minister of economic development. He's still jovial on social occasions, but getting in his door these days is more difficult than getting used car salesmen to throw in a retread. Don's mind is somewhere down a murky coal shaft as he tries to put together a massive deal that will sell out our coal for bargain rates over the next decade. He doesn't want to be bothered by a pesky press corps intent on details of the government's new economic plans.

Now Don is over in Japan trying to persuade the Japanese to take at least 15 million tons of our coal each year so they can forge steel, build more Toyotas or Hondas and ship the finished produet back to us. With a similar lack of logic, Don, the man you can't see at home, rigged up a conference call in his office for reporters Monday so he could report from Tokyo. Like Major Major the only time people can get into see Don is when he isn't there. The only difference between British Columbia and Catch-22 is that in the latter an entrepreneur called Milo Minderbinder insisted that everybody got a share. A lot of people in B.C. complain they are not getting their share today. They're not even getting a share of Don, except in the form of a disembodied voice from across the Pacific. Cynics might sneer at a government that imitates a surreal novel. But a department of ecopomic development that imitates art . . . well, gee whiz, there's more to Don than meets the eye.

DAVID MACDONALD

Labor's Female Backbone

LONDON — The radical slant of the Labor party's national executive committee gets much of its impetus from the strong-willed band of women who form a quarter of its membership.

Their view has a strong influence on the way the committee tries to keep the Labor government faithful to the letter of the manifesto on which the party was elected in 1974.

The committee has 29 members and has wide responsibility for the day to day running of the party. Its power in British political life has always been more apparent than real, especially when, as now, it is left wing controlled while a right-wing party leader is prime minister.

Woman Labor PM?

Seven women serve on it just now, splitting six to one in favor of left wing policies. The single right wing member happens to also be the most intelligent, the most intellectually honest, the most effective and the most likely woman to soon become a Labor prime minister. She is Shirley Williams, 46, who holds the same education portfolio once held by another woman who went far, Margaret Thatcher.

She has fallen heir to the mantle of leader of the right wing of the parliamentary Labor party, now that Home Secretary Roy Jenkins is departing to run the European Economic Community. It could lead, within five years, to Britain having two exceptionally bright women alternating the top jobs in government and opposition.

None of the six left-wing women on the committee can dream of such a future, but they are all more interested in having influence on the present anyway. They are Barbara Castle, Joan Lestor, Lena Jeger, Judith Hart, Renee Short and Joan Maynard.

Barbara Castle is the most passionate and effective speaker of the six. She had a distinguished ministerial career in all four of Harold Wilson's governments and enjoyed the irony of being sacked this year for being too old at 65 by a new prime minister aged 64.

It was as secretary of state for employment and productivity in 1969 that she created an acrimonious moment of Labor party history by unsuccessfully trying to push through legislation to reduce costly strikes by improving the structure of collective bargaining and giving unions responsibilities and penalties for evading them.

Joan Lestor, 46, is a Vancouver-born former nursery school teacher who quit a junior minister's job in the education department last year because of violent disagreement with public spending cuts. Her radical energies were well to the fore in her former post as foreign office junior minister, where she persistently irked then Foreign Secretary James Callaghan by letting her sympathies with black Africa occasionally take her beyond the strictures of government policy.

Lena Jeger, 61, has been on the committee since 1968 and has been an articulate advocate of left-wing solutions to urban problems in such areas as the London inner city riding she represents.

Judith Hart, 52, has had a bumpy political career, her hard line left-wing views often keeping her out of prime ministerial favor. After slowly climbing in the 1964-67 Labor governments to paymaster-general by 1968, she was dropped from the cabinet in 1969 for fiercely opposing the proposed legal curbs on unions.

Given a cabinet job again in February, 1974, she was out again by June, 1975, having resigned rather than accept a demotion brought about by her vigorous fight to get Britain out of the Common Market, against Harold Wilson's wishes.

Toughest of All

Renee Short, 57, is a truculent, leather-lunged tormentor of Labor cabinet ministers in the House of Commons who do not meet her exacting ideological standards. Apart from import controls and a siege economy generally, her recipe for solving Britain's economic problems is increased trade with Soviet-occupied Eastern Europe.

Undoubtedly the toughest of them all is Joan Maynard, 55, a long-time farm workers union official who entered parliament from the steel town of Sheffield in October, 1974. During that campaign, she told a Canadian reporter: "You can't get anything in this society unless you put the boot in."

All her actions in parliament, in street demonstrations favoring a British pullout from Ulster, and in tense meetings of the national executive committee, have amply demonstrated that this remains her guiding philosophy.

Common Law Rights Bill

TORONTO — Bill 140, the Ontario Family Law Reform Act, 1976, is the culmination of years of study by the Ontario Law Reform Commission and other government advisories. It proposes a new legal regime for family and matrimonial relationships which will effect everyone living in the province, whether married here or not.

Assuming the bill is passed by the legislature — a likely event — it will take effect on July 1 next. The government is planning a massive advertising campaign to tell people about its provisions, because they will apply to current marriages, including common law relationships, as well as to future ones.

So far, public attention seems to have been directed to only one feature of the bill, that common law "spouses" will be legally required to support one another, which is not the case now. Such obligation will arise after two years of living together, or earlier if a child is born and there is "some permanence" (not otherwise defined) to the relationship.

Pay Support

Further, common law spouses will not be allowed to write their own marriage contract as married spouses will be allowed to do, and the government hopes that the financial advantage which common law unions are thought to have will thereby be removed, with more legal marriages as a result. That, at least, is the declared intent.

This, however, is only one aspect of a bill which will create a virtually whole new system of law for the family. While most of its provisions are designed to meet situations which arise when there is marriage or family breakdown, many of them will apply to the best of families.

For all marriages, for example, it will not be possible for one spouse to sell, mortgage or dispose of the matrimonial home without the written consent of the other, no matter who has legal title. Homes which are rented will be similarly protected and each spouse will have an equal right to possession. This is going to complicate real estate transactions somewhat.

Every spouse will also be required to be self-supporting and to support the other spouse, according to need and "to the extent he or she is capable of doing so." Under current law, wives are not required to be self-supporting and husbands have no claim for support against their wives.

Every parent will be obliged to support his or her child up to the age of 16, or longer in certain circumstances, to the extent he or she is capable of doing so. Under current law, only fathers are so obligated.

The courts will have power, on application, to determine the amount of support and may garnishee a person's wages to ensure that the support is paid. In what may prove to be a far-reaching provision, public agencies which pay welfare and social assistance benefits will be able to apply to the courts for such orders in respect of welfare recipients who are entitled to support from a spouse, a parent or a child — the last being a pointed reminder, perhaps, that under current law children over 18 are required to support needy parents to the extent of their ability.

WEDDING IN WHITE

The bill stops short of declaring marriage to be an economic partnership while the marriage lasts (a shortfall which is certain to dismay the women's libbers) but it does create "family assets" which must be divided in equal shares if the marriage breaks up. Current law is based on the principle of "separate property" — the assets belong to whoever earned them.

"Family assets" will mean property ordinarily used by both spouses and their children, if any, for shelter, transportation, or for household, educational, recreational, social or aesthetic purposes. Retirement savings programs would not, it appears, be covered and business property would be excluded, although in the case of a business where both spouses participated, the contribution of each would have to be recognized.

The general rule will be that the family assets will be divided in equal shares if the marriage breaks up, but either spouse may apply to the courts for a different distribution because of particular circumstances, and the courts may so order.

May Have Contracts

Spouses who do not like these general arrangements may write their own marriage contracts to provide for the division of property and for support obligations if the marriage breaks up. Such contracts, however, may not limit the rights of either spouse with respect to the matrimonial home, and may not so diminish their support obligations as to make either eligible for those welfare or social assistance payments which are paid on the basis of need.

Such contracts must be in writing and witnessed. They will not be available to persons who are living common law, but for persons already married (and not just those who get married after the law takes effect) they will have to be drawn up unless such persons are content to have the statutory provisions apply in respect of support obligations and the division of property.

The bill also abolishes some of the hoary remnants of the common law of matrimony, such as dower (a widow's right to one-third of husband's real estate), criminal conversation (a husband's right to sue a third person for adultery with his wife), loss of consortium, and others too numerous to mention. Hopefully, what is created will be better than what is abolished.

More Faith

I have written several letters to the mayor and council, some complaining others commending their actions. Ironically, this letter criticizes the alderman one of my recent letters praised, Ald. Murray Glazier, who was reported in the Times Nov. 8: Glazier Denies Council Ignoring Springridge, to have said: "Nothing should be read into the fact that two points were not specifically covered by last weeks report. . ." What else, pray tell, can we read other than ignored when two key points are deleted without explanation? Naturally, council will consider other options, but they cannot ignore our fully-researched, economically and legally-sound proposals. The second deletion, dealing with recycling funds through CMHC, is perhaps the most important point we make. Without these recycled monies the submissions for parks, traffic etc. are meaningless.

It was said that council may question some of the "entrepreneures", who might get contracts were non-profit societies to get the degree of control we ask for. Just as, I suggest, Springridge may question some of the "entrepreneurs" who might get contracts if we are excluded from having an effective voice in the disbursement of federal, provincial and municipal funds allotted to our area.

And what, may I ask, happens if as was stated in the Times article, council is "not attracted to our proposals." Further, what happens if we are not attracted to yours? According to the legislation neighborhoods are to have a voice in their own destiny.

Lastly there were some rather shabby remarks regarding certain NIP members. "They see this program as a power base, possibly, and some unfortunately even as an opportunity to employ themselves."

Like council we are an assorted lot of human beings. My reaction to the idea of NIP committee members being employed on any project in this neighborhood if they are qualified is—excellent! I have always understood it was part of these programs to employ as many local people as possible. These people live here, it is their neighborhood. They have given months of dedicated service, night after night, many hours each week, without pay. They have done excellent work by any standards, including those of the city planning department.

I appreciate that city hall often feels it has been harassed by Springridge (and Vic West and James Bay), but council should try and put itself at our end of the negotiations — talked down to, put through the hoops and over the hurdles, snide innuendos. Just as council feels maligned and frustrated, so do we.

For nine months my wife and I have attended many meetings in our area. During that time I have watched and evaluated the efforts and results of the people working on various NIP committees, just as I have watched and evaluated the efforts and results of Victoria city council for several years. There is no doubt, I assure you, that were I handing out merit badges, the Springridge troop would have many more brownie points than the council troop.

At 60 years of age, I find myself with more faith in the "young dis-established" than in the hallowed halls of the establishment. — H. Hagbarth Sorensen, 1564 Gladstone Avenue.

Police Freebies

On Page 9 of your Nov. 8 issue I read an article entitled Freebies Taboo for Police Here.

I couldn't help but notice a member of the Oak Bay force saying he hadn't had a free coffee in years.

Possibly true but they were and probably still are getting meals at a large discount via the Oak Bay Beach Hotel. As a former employee of that hotel I witnessed on numerous occasions the members of the Oak Bay force eating large roast beef and steak dinners for $1. That is lower than the staff prices.

Lotteries

I have nothing but praises and hurrahs for your leader on Nov. 10, under the heading Lucky Lottery. What simpletons we are! We have had so many warnings. Everything to do with money in Quebec is suspect.

I had a letter published in the Daily Colonist last year under the heading Olympics Warning, which requested an enquiry into Quebec lotteries and asked for frequent audits.

While on this subject I would point out that I was surprised when our banks began selling the tickets of Loto-Canada. I never thought I would see the day when banks would get into the act! Perhaps it is because of loans they have made to the Olympic organization and that they wish to get their hands on the money before it reaches Quebec. What foresight!—Philip Saville, 515 Foul Bay Road.

New Campaign Slowing India Population Growth

By WILLIAM BORDERS

NEW DELHI — Every morning, as the hot Indian sun rises over this ancient land, there are 35,000 more people living here than there were the day before. India's population troubles often breed despair; the country's demographic statistics are among the more appalling in the world.

But emboldened by a new political strength, Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's government has launched a sweeping birth control campaign in the last few months and, even though reports suggested last week that the program has provoked some violent confrontations, there are signs it is beginning to show positive results.

Just last month, according to government figures, more than a million Indians underwent sterilization operations; in the preceding six months the total number of couples protected against conception increased by more than 20 per cent.

In a land where taboos and superstition militate against condoms and pills and interuterine devices, sterilization, usually of the man, has been the principal family planning technique for years. But it has usually been voluntary. Now, various degrees of compulsion are being introduced. States and the federal government have published regulations limiting civil servants to two or three children. To broaden the strictures to include the general population planners are drawing up legislation like a bill in Maharashtra, the state that includes Bombay, to require vasectomies upon the birth of a third child. The bill is now undergoing review in New Delhi and may never be enforced but the government has also liberalized the abortion law, and it is planning to raise the marriage age.

Encouraged by the sense of urgency now being expressed at the highest level, some local officials are even going beyond the law. A slum resident who already has three children is told that he must be sterilized before he can claim a new apartment, for example; a father going in for routine medical treatment is told that he will get it free of charge only if he submits to a vasectomy at the same time. In Uttar Pradesh, 50 miles north of New Delhi, about 50 people were reported to have been killed earlier this month when the police fired into an angry mob that was protesting the forced sterilization of some young men.

Prime Minister Gandhi insists that compulsory sterilization is not government policy. But, as she said in Parliament recently: "The program of sterilization and the adoption of all other known effective measures for the control of population are important and most urgent."

India is not critically overcrowded in the manner, for example, of Bangladesh, which has 80 million people living in a land the size of Wisconsin. Both Germany and Britain are more densely populated than is India. But with a literacy rate of only 30 per cent, and with nearly half the people living at something close to subsistence level, Indians feel that much-needed development will continue to elude them unless they can sharply reduce the birth rate, which is now 35 per thousand, more than twice what it is in the United States. In the 29 years of independence, India has registered impressive progress on a number of social and economic fronts.

But in case after case, the gains have not been nullified by the relentless population growth. With better utilization of fertilizer, the country is producing more than twice as much grain as it was in the 1940's, but there are also twice as many mouths to feed, so the gain is minimal. With a population of 600 million, India already has almost three times as many people as the United States, occupying one-third as much land. Unchecked, the population will reach one billion by the time a baby born today reaches his 24th birthday.

"The time factor is so pressing, and the population growth so formidable that we have to get out of the vicious circle through a direct assault upon this problem, as a national commitment," says Health Minister Karan Singh, the moving force behind the new program. Although the program is not directly related to the stern new political order that descended upon India 16 months ago, criticism of government policy has become rarer.

Family planning explained in village square

The drive to curb the birth rate has as one of its leading proponents, Sanjay Gandhi, the prime minister's son, who has become one of the more important people in India. Mr. Gandhi, who is married but has no children, has made the birth control slogan, "Stop at two!" a recurring theme of his many speeches, and a basic plank in a five-point program he advances for improving India.

Enormous obstacles remain. A large proportion of the recent gains have been made in urban areas, and not out in the backward villages where three-fourths of the people live. Ignorance and a mistrust slow any gains. Many men cannot be convinced that a vasectomy does not cause impotence. When a school in the countryside began giving fifthgraders routine typhoid inoculations, large numbers of parents kept their children at home, fearing that they were being sterilized by injection. To counter religious objections, the government has researched Hindu scriptures to find support for the idea of small families. Many Moslems oppose birth control, so the government is campaigning hard among them.

Among the Westerners who flooded into India in the 1950's and 1960's, there used to be an assumption that once an uneducated villager understood birth control, he would practice it, so as to keep his family small and thereby improve his economic status. But often that has not proved true. Many poor people actively want to have more children, even after they know how not to, because children will help them in the fields, and take care of them in old age. A Harvard-educated sociologist named Mahmood Mamdani said, after a recent study in north India: "People are not poor because they have large families. Quite the contrary, they have large families because they are poor. To practice contraception would have meant to wilfully court economic disaster."

As in the rest of the underdeveloped world, the recent population explosion in India was not caused by any increase in the rate at which people were having children, but rather by the sharp decrease in the rate at which they were dying. Because of better sanitation and health care, the annual death rate is now only 14 per thousand, half of what it was at the time of independence, with the result that average life expectancy increased by 20 years. Unlike some of its smaller, poorer neighbors, India has the resources to be a great nation; already, even in its poverty, there are fewer than a dozen countries in the world with a greater gross national product than India's, and its untapped mineral wealth is vast.

"Too many people has always been our problem," a ministry official said the other day, as he enthusiastically described what he regards as a new determination to solve that difficulty. "Now for the first time, all sections of the society are involved," he said. "The ruling party, the village leaders, the press, the unions. There's a new national commitment, and I think it is going to work."

Getting High the Natural Way: It's Big Business Now

By ART HARRIS

SAN FRANCISCO — Eric, an unemployed Berkeley carpenter who has taken up as one of the low priests spreading "organic highs," has sold 9,000 baby Hawaiian wood rose seeds by mail in three months. The seeds, which look like tiny filberts and taste like wood, are touted for their mind-expanding properties. They contain (naturally) lysergic acid amide, one element in LSD, and, says Eric, promise the nibbler a mild "trip."

Amy Chung, a 23-year-old Hastings law school student and daughter of a herb importer, munches red Korean ginseng roots before final exams. She claims the roots sharpen her memory, get her through the night with little sleep and earn her last-minute A's.

Dr. Michael Gerber, a young Mill Valley physician, can't handle all the patients flocking to receive the black bag of herbal cures he combines with traditional medicine. He turns patients on to peppermint tea (instead of coffee) and recommends teaspoons of a special cayenne pepper for vitamin C and energy.

Eric, Amy and Michael are all new recruits in the growing army of awareness surrounding "natural" highs — nonchemical turn-ons and curatives that have captured the fantasy, imagination and entrepreneurship of the United States in the past few years. The '60s youth culture has, in turn, embraced hard drugs, soft drugs, meditation, yoga, jogging, tennis — and, most recently, organic release via the seeds, roots and plants (other than marijuana) growing in nature's great outdoors.

Natural food fads, fears of contaminated psychedelic drugs on the street and the legal risks inherent in seeking illegal "elixers" have spawned a growing demand for organic highs. Consider the evidence:

• University students here recently grabbed every seat for a special course — "Getting High Legally." The professor boasted a bachelor of arts degree in hallucinogens from Goddard College and promised to show and tell the class all about 40 psychoactive plants growing like daisies in America's back yards.

• Curious members of the "now" generation are mailing off their dollars for such hiply soothing unguents as African Yohimbe bark, gotu kola, "opium lettuce," "organic speed" (a mixture of kola nut tea and chia seeds at $1 per ounce) and kava root.

• Not only is the mail-order business in organic deliverance booming, but local plant shops report customers are snapping up the San Pedro cactus, which contains mescaline like its step-brother the peyote cactus (peyote's mind-expanding properties were popularized in the writings of Carlos Castenada).

The Pepsi generation is chewing wood rose seeds for cosmic consciousness and brewing tea from damiana leaves and yohimbe bark to rekindle peace and love on earth. Dr. Gerber describes yohimbe as an aphrodisiac, although he recommends exercise and an active fantasy world as a better way to removing roadblocks in the bedroom.

Of course, folk healing through herbs and incantations is nothing new. The use of marijuana for medicinal purposes has been traced to China almost 4,000 years ago. The Muichol Indians nibbled the peyote eactus for centuries to gain insight through its psychoactive element, mescaline. African healers and Indian medicine men have used the forests and jungles as their pharmacies down through the ages.

But recently a network of mail-order medicine men and women have sprung up in the classified sections of such popular publications as Rolling Stone and High Times.

Jewell Day, a 43-year-old Sonora, Calif., businesswoman, pushes her "legal highs" from the back pages of popular youth and music-oriented magazines. Her personal conglomerate also includes apartments and a successful card room near Yosemite National Park. But her mail-order subdivision, Electric Earth Herbs, has shown the most dramatic success, she says.

Since Day bought the operation last December, she has filled about 4,000 orders per month for such goodies as kava root, gotu kola, "legal grass" and "organic speed."

"The demand is here," Day says. "A lot of people who use marijuana and other drugs now want legal highs that don't damage their brains."

Day is no pharmacologist. And medical research has not yet correlated brain damage with marijuana use, but there is no denying that much of the demand for organic highs stems from their clean status in the eyes of the law. Most "pop" herbs simply don't appear anywhere in the state or federal controlled-substances act which defines dangerous and illegal drugs.

And Albert Habib, assistant special agent in the local U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration office here, can't imagine an armed dragnet to bust dealers in lobelia or damiana leaves. "We've never encountered anything like that," he says, smiling. "We go after dangerous drugs like heroin, cocaine, marijuana, hash oil and LSD."

The plethora of herbs, roots and leaves advertised in various magazines has not yet proved a threat to society, say officials. The cops have never apprehended a glassy-eyed robber high on, say, yohimbe bark, knocking over a bank.

Dr. Edward Tocus, chief of the drug abuses staff in the neuropsychopharmacological division of the Food and Drug Administration, says these substances "are not causing any public health harm. If there's any harm, it's the way people are wasting their money. Most of the activity (produced by the drugs) is so weak as to be negligible."

The "folk drugs" will be one topic of discussion at the quarterly meeting on of the FDA's drug abuse research advisory committee, but Tocus does not plan to recommend "any emergency action. We prefer not to dilute our resources" by concentrating on the folk drugs.

But some herbs and plants fall in a legal twilight zone. Take Hawaiian wood rose seeds. The seeds are not listed in the federal controlled-substances act, but one major alkaloid in the seeds is listed — lysergic acid amide, also an element in LSD. Does that make possession of the seeds illegal?

No one seems to know.

A paper prepared for the FDA by Robert Varipapa, an officer of the Maryland Poison Information Centre, says the wood rose seeds "have become a drug abuse and overdose problem." Not only do the seeds produce hallucinogenic effects, but they can result in "a miserable hangover."

Jewell Day straddles the safe side of the fence on wood rose seeds: She doesn't sell them. But her "legal grass" — a combination of hops, damiana leaves, Korean ginseng, lobelia and yohimbe bark — is selling like hot cakes at $2.50 an ounce.

"It's a different high than pot," says Day, who maintains she has never smoked her "legal grass." This message comes from her clients. "It has a relaxing effect," she explains.

Carmen Helisten, director of Pharmchem Research Foundation in Palo Alto, says the great demand for organic psychedelics (from peyote to psilocybin mushrooms to wood rose seeds, etc.) goes hand in hand with popular fears that LSD might cause genetic damage to unborn generations.

Pharmchem Labs screens methadone patients and runs 300 to 400 tests a month on drugs mailed in off the street for anonymous analysis. Recently the lab ran tests on psilocybin mushrooms found in Oregon, along with a host of other chemicals off the street.

Eric touts his Hawaiian wood rose seeds as an organic alternate to LSD. "It's really a high," he says.

Eric views his mail-order business as an acceptable avenue to promote social change. "I can't expect the world to change itself," he says. "So I have to be the initiator."

And just who are the people mailing their money in for herbs and roots and suddenly flocking to nature's cures like bears to honey?

There are, of course, the graduates of the '60s drug culture who now turn on to "natural" highs only: there are the drug lovers seeking new highs, devotees of the human potential movement, working class folks, and just plain curious. And Dr. Michael Gerber's Mill Valley patients.

"They are mostly upper-middle-class, self-realized human beings with an awakened consciousness," says Dr. Gerber. "They are interested in reorganizing their body chemistry so the body will take care of itself."

A Fable For Our Times

By KATHERINE WHITEHORN
London Observer

Once upon a time there was a woman called Meg who lived on a farm, cooking and milking the cow and swatting her two children Tommy and Alice; occasionally she threw a bucket of water over the living quarters of daft old Uncle Joshua, who lived in the pig shed. Her husband Joe was a farmer, so the children grew up at least knowing lots of good words for grumbling about the weather, and which end of a cow was up.

But then Joe went to work in a factory. And soon an Inspector arrived and said that if the children didn't learn to read and write and do sums they wouldn't be any good in the factory when they grew up, and no, Meg could not teach them herself, because parental teaching was unscientific and usually worse than useless. So he took them off to school.

And another Inspector turned up and took pity on the poor filthy old Uncle and (after an initial confusion as to which was which) removed him from the company of the pig and hauled him off to live in a Hygienic Home, cared for by experts.

After which there didn't seem much point in Meg kicking around at home any more, so she got a job in a Chinese takeaway. Her wages were only half as much as Joe's, but this did not seem to worry her union representative Shop Stuey at all. She was able to bring Joe's dinner home in a container which was a good thing as she was still expected to do all the cleaning and provide the meals at home.

But then one day the Inspector came back, now called Community Worker, and started to cast doubt on the Hygienic Home. Uncle Joshua, it seemed, was not doing so well there. He pined. He missed the pig. He even, the worker insisted, missed Meg.

More studies showed that the inmates of such Homes were going gaga faster, making their beds wetter and loosing their teeth more freely than those Uncles who had avoided being rounded up in the first place. And what with the cost of such studies, and of organizing the Homes nationwide, and sending them out circulars on how they should be run, there was really very little money to pay any experts. So how would Meg feel about having the old boy back? She would have every support, she was told — like leaflets on the needs of Uncles and visits from the Community Worker on the first Monday of every month.

Meg wasn't too sure about this, but she thought she'd better consult Joe; so she gathered up Tommy who was home from school with a cold (diagnosed by a new school medical officer who didn't realize his nose always ran) and sent him off to Larks Iron Works where Joe worked. Unfortunately Tommy had learned reading by the Look and Say method and so had no very clear idea how letters should be assembled to form a meaning: he came back two hours later saying there wasn't no Krals Iron Works that he could see. Meg gave up and said she'd let the worker know later; and in the meantime could the Health Visitor call as Joe's back was playing him up something dreadful?

When the Health Visitor arrived she said Joe's back was no doubt due to stress, though there was some doubt as to whether the stress itself stemmed from working in a huge inhuman unit like a factory, or from the time his mates had stopped speaking to him because he'd by mistake thrown a full bottle of whisky at the referee instead of an empty one. In any event Meg, said the Health Visitor, could do as much as anyone to make him feel better. So she decided to let him off the Chinese takeaway that evening and get him fish and chips instead; and while she was unwrapping the chips she started reading the paper they were wrapped in.

She read that an eminent doctor had pointed out that medical science could do little against psychosomatic factors, which were determined mainly by a man's personal relationships; and that a headmaster had stressed the need for teaching human values and community involvement in school, never mind the maths; and that Family Background and Environmental Factors were what really counted. And at that point an ambulance arrived and decanted the returned Uncle on to the doorstep.

★ ★ ★

So what Meg wondered was why on earth, if all the experts in the end said that what mattered was what she used to provide, and not their own highly specialised skills in doctoring, teaching and geriatric care, they had ever bothered to haul everyone out of her home in the first place. When she said so, however, they all smiled tolerantly at her, explained to one another that she was of course only unco-operative because she was inadequate, and were indeed just about to offer to take her into care herself when they remembered in the nick of time that they hadn't got any. So they all pushed off, and Joe and Meg and Tommy and Alice and Uncle Joshua all lived unhappily ever after.

Separation PQ Goal

MONTREAL (CP) — The intention of the Parti Quebecois to lead Quebec out of Confederation and establish an independent country remains the party's primary goal, although PQ officials played down separation during the election campaign.

Voter fear of separation from Canada was seen within the party as an important reason for the PQ's poor showing in the 1973 provincial election, and with this in mind the referendum plank in the PQ platform was created.

At a party convention in 1974, PQ ideologist Claude Morin engineered insertion of a clause which says that a PQ government will hold a referendum on independence if negotiations with Ottawa fail.

"A Parti Quebecois government commits itself to:

"1. Set immediately in motion the process of accession to sovereignty by proposing in the national assembly, shortly after its election, a law authorizing it:

"a) to demand from Ottawa the repatriation to Quebec of all powers, except those that the two governments want to place in joint organizations for the purpose of economic association . . .;

"2. In the event that it has to proceed unilaterally, to take over systematically all the powers of a sovereign state, securing the support of Quebecois beforehand by means of a mass referendum."

PQ leader, Rene Levesque has said he does not expect Ottawa to readily grant the demands, and Prime Minister Trudeau, commenting on the party's sweep to power Monday night, said he would fight to keep Quebec in Canada.

If voters were to decide in a referendum in favor of a separate Quebec, the platform calls for drafting of a constitution that would declare Quebec a "presidential republic."

A Quebec president would be elected by direct universal suffrage, and could serve a maximum of two four-year terms. A vice-president, "automatically elected with him," would replace the president in the event of the latter's death or resignation.

Among the president's prerogatives would be the appointment of cabinet members "who can't simultaneously serve as (legislature) members."

A president would have "the right to veto laws passed in the national assembly, although the national assembly could overide the veto with a two-thirds majority."

Bourassa Loses Seat In Separatist Sweep

He told reporters before the meeting that the federal government planned to review its plans to claim the country's constitution from Britain, and that he would inform all 10 premiers before a secheduled mid-December constitutional conference of any federal position changes.

The prime minister had said Monday that Levesque has been granted a mandate only to form a provincial government and not to take Quebec out of Confederation.

He echoed the comments of other party leaders in saying the defeat of the Liberal regime was not a vote for separatism but a vote on economic and other local questions, he said.

"I am confident that Quebecers will continue to reject separatism because they still believe their destiny is linked with an indivisible Canada," he added in his brief 200-word statement.

He declined to answer reporter's questions except to reply that the election "didn't go the way I would have wanted it to go."

Bourassa, who conceded defeat three hours and 10 minutes after the polls closed, said his party had been caught between the left and the right.

"Society today has polarized," he said. "People are more and more liable to move to extremes. The left thought we were not liberal enough and the right that we lacked firmness."

Outwardly unperturbed and unruffled despite the defeat, Bourassa appealed to the province's 6.1 million citizens to take a calm and "well-thought-out reaction" to the election results.

Some political observers felt the Liberal downfall came as a result of a split in the federalist vote between the Liberals and the Union Nationale, which campaigned hard for the 20 per cent English and Immigrant vote.

About 59 per cent of the voters cast their ballots for federalist parties — Liberal, Union Nationale, Creditiste and Popular National Party — apparently confirming recent opinion polls showing that a majority of Quebecers are not prepared to take Quebec out of Canada.

Among elected candidates touted as cabinet material are:

The six party members who formed the official opposition in the last assembly. They are lawyers Robert Burns, Jacques-Yvan Morin and Marc-Andre Bedard; teachers Lucien Lessard and Claude Charron; and businessman Marcel Leger.

Claude Morin, constitutional adviser to four Quebec premiers since the early 1960s, a leading light who is credited as the architect of party's step-by-step program for independence, and the man who toppled former federal cabinet minister Jean Marchand in the Quebec City area riding of Louis Hebert.

Camille Laurin, a psychiatrist and the party's leader in the assembly from 1970 to 1973.

Jean-Guy Cardinal, education minister in the Union Nationale government from 1966 to 1970, who resurfaced this year as Parti Quebecois candidate in Prevost riding, stealing the seat from Liberal member Bernard Pareil, mayor of St. Jerome, about 30 miles north of Montreal.

Union Nationale leader Rodrigue Biron was the first candidate elected, about 45 minutes after the polls closed.

Camil Samson, leader and only sitting member of the Creditistes at the dissolution of the legislature Oct. 18, was returned in the northwestern riding of Rouyn-Noranda but all 108 other Creditiste candidates were defeated.

Jerome Choquette, five years the justice minister under Mr. Bourassa until he quit the Liberal party in disagreement over language legislation in September, 1975, was defeated in the Montreal riding of Outremont by Liberal candidate Andre Raynauld, former chairman of the Economic Council of Canada.

The only member of Choquette's party to be elected was Fabien Roy, a Creditiste defector, who recaptured his seat in Beauce South, a rural riding south of Quebec City.

Victor Goldbloom, a former Liberal cabinet minister who kept his seat in part because of an hysterical fear campaign waged on his behalf by some prominent members of the Montreal business community, said "We enter a new phase of our existence in this province. Now we have to figure out how to keep Canada together."

The Liberals lost some support in English Montreal but retained enough of the popular vote to keep all but one seat in the community. The chief organizer for Montreal, West-Island, Romeo Brault, a franco-Manitoban, told newsmen "There'll be no separation as far as I'm concerned."

"I'll be damned if anyone is taking my rights as a Canadian away. The next election we'll be the government again. In the meantime there will be a complete re-evaluation of Liberal policy."

Many Liberals noted that most of the party nationalists had lost their seats while hardline federalists had been able to hang on.

The campaign began Sept. 19 with a target of $800,000 to support 25 charitable organizations.

Executive director Stuart Drummond said today this year's campaign has gone well in light of the fact that $681,000 was raised in last year's drive which was wrapped up Jan. 30, 1976.

He said the final report on this year's campaign will be held at the end of the month.

Nobody has the right to force a drink down your throat.

"What! You're not drinking?"
When somebody asks, "What are you having to drink?", nowadays most people assume 'drink' means 'alcohol' and consider it a friendly gesture. Most of us enjoy a drink once in a while, but there are times when YOU don't want a drink, or YOU feel you've had enough. That's when the pressure to drink can be not so friendly. Some people will become quite hostile if you don't join them. "Hey look, the last of the big drinkers!"

Put your foot (and your glass) down.
It's not easy to resist pressure. But, if we are going to tackle the drinking problem in this country, we must all have the courage to refuse the drink that's being forced down our throats. Consider that approximately 40% of all traffic accidents involve alcohol; that total costs related to alcohol abuse have been estimated to be in excess of $1 billion, more than $40 for each Canadian, annually. More than 600,000 people in this country have a drinking problem. But, all the statistics come down to one thing: the drink in your hand and your responsible attitude towards it. It's our social attitudes that help cause the problems; it's by speaking out that you'll help change them.

Tell other people where you stand.
By having the courage of your convictions to speak out against behaviour such as — 'come on, just one more' — you will encourage others to say the same thing. If you're not sure what to say, cut this out. The information may help you to state your case.

'Dialogue on drinking' is a program to help you do just that. Think and talk about the problems. If you have any specific comments, we'd like to hear from you. We believe that if enough people talk about the problems, we're that much closer to solving them.

No Real Power for a Pullout

Times News Services

OTTAWA — The Parti Quebecois government about to take power in Quebec will have no more authority to take Quebec out of Confederation than the government it has replaced, a senior federal authority on the constitution said of the provincial election results Monday.

Even if the PQ won the referendum on independence which it has pledged to hold in two or three years time, it would still have to negotiate with the federal government and the other provinces for a transfer of power, said the authority, a senior official in the Privy Council.

The referendum would in no way be legally binding, and would serve only to clarify the feelings of the population. It would be up to the politicians to set their positions accordingly.

In London, government sources said today any move by Quebec to secede from Canada would need an act of the British Parliament to make it legal.

The process would be so long and complicated that it might take years, they added.

In any case, they said, the British government is making no plans at the moment to take such action, despite the PQ victory.

Meanwhile, Liberal Senator Hazen Argue said today that all Canadians, not just Quebecers, should be allowed to decide by plebiscite whether Quebec can withdraw from Confederation.

Any talk of Quebec separation is misleading, he said.

If Quebec separated, he argued, Canada would cease to exist.

"If the people of Quebec should be asked if they wish to separate — to destroy Canada — then all Canadians should be asked in a plebiscite immediately following if they wish to keep united all 10 provinces and territories.

"And so long as a majority of Canadians counted from coast to coast want to retain Canada there should be no separation."

THIRD OUSTER OF A REGIME

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

The defeat of the Liberal government in Quebec on Monday is the third straight setback for a provincial government in the last 14 months. Before that, the trend of the previous three years was to re-elect governments in the 10 provinces.

The pattern was opposite in the years 1969 to 1972, when voters in most provinces dumped the parties in power.

Carnival Time as Strangers Kiss . . .

MONTREAL (UPI)—Monday's election of a separatist government in Quebec may have spawned fears in parts of English Canada, but in the streets of French-speaking East-End Montreal it brought demonstrations of festival-like joy.

As one walked these streets in the post-election dark, total strangers met, embraced and parted to continue their tour of what one roamer said "seems like a new Quebec."

The strollers seemed to presume, in this French-speaking quarter of the world's second-largest French-speaking city, that anyone abroad was a supporter of the Parti Quebecois.

A slug from a bottle of beer or a sip from a wineskin was offered to the passing stranger.

There was one man in the parking lot of a chain restaurant on Pie IX Boulevard who stood on a car roof waving his fleur de lis flag.

The swirling banner was lit by the neon illuminatin of a sign directly above which advertised, in English only, donuts.

There was applause.

Near the Parti Quebecois headquarters squads of policemen tried, and failed, to untangle pedestrian-automobile tie-ups at major intersections. But the honking of horns that resulted visibly did not reflect the usual frustration.

Even as one moved away from the centre of activity of the Pequistes to cruise side streets, the reflex of exchanged waves and smiles persisted.

This reporter was driving a car with plates from the neighboring province of Ontario. One of the street-centre group noticed and shouted across the street in French.

"Hey, are you scared."

At the negative reply he smiled and said "bon."

GRIT MPs FREER NOW

OTTAWA(CP) — Federal Liberals will feel freer to comment on policies of the Quebec government now that Liberals no longer are in power, says Marc Lalonde, leader of the Quebec Liberal caucus in Parliament.

The important thing now is for the 74 Quebec MPs of all parties to make it clear that they represent Quebec voters just as much as provincial members do, Lalonde, minister of health and welfare, said in a telephone interview.

Lalonde said he and his parliamentary colleagues have been fighting for federalism for many years and will continue to do so on a day-to-day basis in the period leading up to the referendum on independence pleged by premier-elect Rene Levesque.

He said he is confident voters will reject independence by a wide margin.

DE GAULLE CALLED 'PROPHETIC'

PARIS (UPI) — Yves Guena, secretarty-general of the Gaullist party, said his party sees the results of the Quebec election as "a resounding statement of the French reality in Canada."

Guena added, "our party rejoices in the results and addresses a brotherly salute to the people of Quebec. It takes advantage of this occasion to underline the clarity of views of the late General Charles de Gaulle who by calling out in July, 1967, "Long live free Quebec" expressed a prophetic vision and at the same time contributed to advancing the course of history."

The influential afternoon daily Le Monde ran a four-column banner, an editorial and an article by editor-in-chief Andre Fontaine headlined the victory of the 'white-Negroes' — all on page One.

In addition Le Monde published two inside pages of background including the visit to Quebec by the late French president Charles de Gaulle in 1967, when he ruffled Ottawa's feelings with a speech about French Canada that ended with the call, "Long live free Quebec."

For a number of reasons, the small car market has substantially declined during the last two years.

This has hurt American Motors which is exclusively a small car producer.

Due to cost increases, small car prices have risen over $1,000 on average in the last five years.

In order to convince these buyers to return to the market and look to American Motors, we've reduced the list price of the 1977 Gremlin by $250.

What's in it for American Motors?

By reducing prices we expect to significantly increase our sales volume. In fact, we are banking on a 30% increase in Gremlin sales.

What's in it for small car buyers?

This reduction in Gremlin price means that AMC Gremlin lists for less than the Ford Pinto 2-door Sedan and less than Chevy Vega 2-door Sport Coupe, even with G.M.'s cash bonus. The base list prices are as follows:

Gremlin	$3,349.
Ford Pinto 2-door Sedan	$3,582.
Vega 2-door Sport Coupe	$3,590.

Gremlin is list priced lower but gives you more.

All three cars are equipped with bucket seats as standard equipment, but there the similarity ends:

Compare Gremlin's performance.

Gremlin gives you a 6 cylinder engine as standard equipment for greater acceleration to pass at city or highway speeds. The Vega and Pinto come standard with 4 cylinder engines.

The Gremlin has a wider track for stability, and at 2806 pounds Gremlin has more road-hugging weight.

Compare Gremlin's room and comfort.

Gremlin has the greatest overall width for more hip and shoulder room. Gremlin's long wheel base combined with its wider track and road-hugging weight gives you a smooth, stable ride.

Compare Gremlin's versatility.

The Gremlin is no ordinary 2-door Sedan. Only the Gremlin comes standard with a big wide hatch, fold down rear seat and even a carpeted cargo area, making the Gremlin a great small car for people who use a car for more than just basic transportation.

AMC'S NEW BUYER PROTECTION PLAN II. The most important reason why to buy an AMC.

Carter Likely to Trip Over Burns' Policies

WASHINGTON (AP) — One of Jimmy Carter's biggest stumbling blocks in shaping U.S. economic policy next year is likely to be the Federal Reserve Board and its strong-willed chairman, 72-year-old Arthur Burns.

Carter and Burns have sharply different views on inflation and unemployment, and which is worse for the country. Carter also wants changes in the board's operations and the status of its chairman.

Through its control of the U.S. monetary system, the board influences interest rates and the money supply. Carter says he wants the board to wield that influence to speed up the economy and reduce unemployment. This can be done without adding to inflation, the president-elect says.

But people who know Burns say he remains convinced that inflation is the chief threat to the economy, and they say it is highly unlikely he would suddenly switch signals just to suit Carter.

Carter can't remove Burns, because Burns's term as chairman doesn't expire until Jan. 31, 1978. A source close to Burns said there is almost no chance Burns will step down early.

None of the terms of the other six members of the board will expire until 1978 either, so Carter will be unable to change the makeup of the board unless there is an early resignation.

Burns first public reaction to the election and what it means for the board probably will come when he appears before the Senate banking committee to disclose the board's targets for the growth of the money supply.

There have been no contacts between Burns and the president-elect.

The Federal Reserve Board acts to influence the money supply and interest rates by putting money into the economy, or taking it out, through the purchase or sale of government securities.

Statistics to Be Improved After GNP Doubts—Chretien

OUTSIDE AID HAD APPROVAL

OTTAWA (CP) — Two senior Statistics Canada officials said Monday there were no irregularities in a request by an employee in 1973 for University of Toronto financing of a study on shopping centres.

The officials said former chief Statistician Dr. Sylvia Ostry had authorized the employee, Gerald Snyder, to seek outside financing for the study because the federal government agency lacked the resources.

Robert Desramaux, executive assistant to the chief statistician, and Vincent Berlinguette, assistant chief statistician, said in telephone interviews that Statistics Canada often seeks outside financing, especially from provincial governments or universities, for certain projects.

Published reports have said the shopping centre study was a moonlighting project instigated by Snyder.

Snyder was one of three Statistics Canada employees reprimanded in 1974 for involvement in Alan Jeffrey Associates, a firm established in 1972 to sell data obtained from Statistics Canada to outside clients.

Both Desramaux and Berlinguette denied there was any connection between the shopping centre study and Alan Jeffrey Associates.

Desramaux said Snyder had originally proposed in 1971 a study on shopping centres, but the suggestion was vetoed. The idea was revived in 1972 or 1973 with the consent of Mrs. Ostry, now deputy minister of consumer and corporate affairs.

OTTAWA (CP) — A report defending Statistics Canada estimates of the gross national product (GNP) against charges of inaccuracy was tabled Monday in the Commons by Industry Minister Jean Chretien.

Conservative MP Don Mazankowski (Vegreville), who first raised the matter in the Commons, called the report "essentially a technical rebuttal to a memo circulated within Statistics Canada."

He had pressed Chretien for action a week ago, citing a Statistics Canada memo which said the department's estimates of the GNP were inaccurate because estimates of labor income and consumer expenditure "are unacceptably inaccurate."

Chretien's report said steps were under way to improve the statistics but he described as false any implications that "the quality of the GNP figures has declined substantially and that this information has been withheld from the Canadian public."

The minister's report indicated that memos criticizing the agency's methods of calculating statistics are not unusual.

"As a memorandum dealing with possible errors in, and revisions to, statistics which are inputs to the system of national accounts, it was not at all unusual," the report says.

The inaccuracy of some statistics is a result, the report says, of the way in which statistics are collected. Blame also was placed on the fact the economy always is changing.

The GNP statistics in question are a combination of statistics showing all income generated in Canada by the production of all goods and services. It is a measure used to show the condition of the economy and how it compares with economies of other countries.

The government calculates GNP by adding labor income, corporation profits, net income of unincorporated business minus inventory, net farm income, rents, interest, investment income, capital consumption allowances and indirect taxes minus subsidies.

Chretien's report blamed statistical error in the 1970s on the changes in the economy including changes in supply and demand in many markets, the instability of the labor market and price changes.

The report describes steps being taken to improve the statistical base of the GNP.

To improve labor income estimates, the department has started to separate by industry the annual tax figures from Revenue Canada and compare them with industry data collected by Statistics Canada.

Noose Referendum Urged

OTTAWA (CP) — Parliament betrayed Canadians when it abolished capital punishment and the only way to restore their faith is to hold a national referendum, Benno Friesen (PC-Surrey-White Rock) said Monday.

Polls during the last five years have shown overwhelming support for capital punishment, but the government chose to impose its desire on the country, he said in the Commons.

He proposed that a referendum be held during the next general election, expected within two years. But the hour set aside for debate of his motion ended without a vote.

He said he did not approve of government by referendum, but the people deserve a say on this issue.

CANADA FEARS DAM

By IAIN HUNTER
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — External Affairs Minister Don Jamieson Confirmed Monday that Canada sent a diplomatic note to the U.S. last month calling for a moratorium on construction of the Lonetree Reservoir as part of the Garrison Diversion project.

He stated that Ottawa sent the note to the American authorities because the federal government isn't prepared to take Washington's word that the construction won't potentially affect the qualify of Canadian waters downstream.

Walter Dinsdale (PC—Brandon-Souris) asked in the House whether Washington had replied to the Oct. 12 note from Ottawa, and whether it was sent because of new evidence that boundary waters will be polluted by the building of the reservoir.

Jamieson said that he expects a reply within two weeks.

He stated that the government asked the U.S. to refrain from further construction on the reservoir because of uncertainties about the effects of the project.

Outside the House the external affairs minister said that Canada expressed concern "months ago" about the proposed construction of the reservoir as part of the Garrison diversion plan in Montana and expressed the hope that American authorities will take a new look at Ottawa's representations now that the presidential election campaign is over.

Jobless Will Remain: Carter

CARTER

PLAINS, Ga. (WP) — President-elect Jimmy Carter said Monday that the American people should be prepared to tolerate an unemployment rate of 5 per cent or more through much of his first term in office.

At his second press conference since the election, Carter was asked whether his goal of an unemployment rate of 4 to 4½ per cent by 1980 necessarily means that unemployment will be 5 to 7 per cent in the years before then.

"I would guess that is a likely prospect," he replied.

The unemployment rate is now 7.9 per cent.

But Carter also said that the state of the economy will not delay his plans to seek to overhaul the government bureaucracy and the tax and welfare systems.

One of Carter's first important steps in dealing with the economy will come early next week when he will make his first post-election trip to Washington and meet with, among others, federal reserve board chairman Arthur Burns, who may be asked to continue in his job.

Meanwhile, in Washington, a panel of three economists, including a member of Jimmy Carter's economic advisory task force, recommended a tax reduction for the economy in 1977.

But the panel differed on the amount of the tax cut, its form; and even the reasons for taking the tax-cutting step.

The strongest recommendation on taxes came from the Carter adviser, Professor Benjamin Friedman of Harvard University. Friedman — an expert on monetary economics — urged a one-time tax rebate of at least $10 to $12 billion because all indicators point to a "weak" economy in 1977.

Friedman appeared with Prof. Allan Meltzer of the Carnegie-Mellon University, and Henry Kaufman, economist and partner of Salomon Bros., New York investment bankers before the Senate Banking Committee.

Kaufman proposed a more modest rebate, of about $9 billion, which he said would "strengthen business expectations and improve consumer sentiment." He added that an effort should be made to concentrate the tax rebate in lower-income groups.

FORD RETURNS

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ford returned Monday to Washington from eight days of vacation in Palm Springs, Calif., and is "ready to complete the duties of his presidency," his spokesman Ron Nessen said. Ford has 66 days left in office.

Ford has scheduled staff meetings for today to get back to a working pace, Nessen said.

Ford had spent some time Sunday looking at property in the southern California desert resort, with an eye to buying after his term as president ends Jan 20, deputy press secretary John Carlson said.

NAZI CRIMES LAID TO THREE IN U.S.

WASHINGTON (WP) — The first act in an unprecedented legal drama — an attempt to deport three elderly East Europeans for alleged complicity in the Second World War murder of thousands of Jews — opened Monday in three tiny courtrooms scattered along the Eastern seaboard.

The separate but simultaneous hearings of approximately 15 minutes each took place before special hearing officers of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service in Baltimore, New York and Waterbury, Conn. But, despite the distances between them, they seemed like uncanny carbon copies of each other.

At each, the centre of attention was an elderly man, who came to the United States 25 or more years ago and who since has lived in quiet obscurity.

At each, the man was confronted with a list of charges alleging that he had collaborated with Nazi Germany's efforts to systematically exterminate Europe's Jews.

The three, all resident aliens, are Karlis Detlavs, 65, a Latvian who lives in Baltimore; Boleslavs Maikovskis, 72, also Latvian, who lives in Mineola, N.Y., and Bronius (Bruno) Kaminskas, 74, a Lithuanian who is a resident of Hartford, Conn.

Despite the essentially dry and legalistic nature of the proceedings, there was a brief moment of tension and trama in New York when Maikovskis appeared for his hearing. He is charged with selecting Jews for execution and assaulting Jews in German-occupied Latvia during the war.

Extraordinary security precautions were in effect, because Maikovskis, allegedly a captain in a Latvian SS battalion, has reportedly received threats against his life.

Among those in the courtroom with press credentials was Tuvia Freedman, a concentration camp survivor who helped to track down Adolf Eichmann, the war criminal kidnapped from Argentina by Israeli agents in 1961 and later executed in Jerusalem.

As Maikovskis, a small, thin, neatly dressed man with horn-rimmed glasses, took his seat, Friedman thrust in front of him a zeroxed page from a book entitled "Drugavas Vanagi — Who Are They?", which was published in Riga in 1963 and lists accusations against Maikovskis and other alleged Latvian war criminals.

Friedman then asked Maikovskis in German if he was the man whose picture appeared on the page. Maikovskis looked down at his hands folded over a brief case on his lap and said nothing.

DEFINING THE CRIME

DETROIT (AP) — It was hard for Detroit homicide detectives to keep straight faces when they read the message on their teletype printer.

The message came from the Presque Isle County sheriff's office in the northeastern reaches of the Lower Peninsula.

The sheriff asked to hear from "any department having unsolved murders, kidnappings, assaults or armed robberies" in which the suspect used sawed-off shotguns or knives.

Home Births Safest, Medics Claim

NEW YORK (AP) — The safest place for a baby to be born is at home, two doctors have told an obstetrical conference here.

Dr. Robert Mendelsohn of the University of Illinois said Monday that a baby born in a hospital is more likely to suffer damage than one born at home.

"Doctors intervene too much in what is a natural process. They act as if pregnancy is a nine-month disease that needs their help to be resolved."

Dr. Lewis Mehl of the University of Wisconsin's Infant Development Centre told the conference of the American Foundation for Maternal and Child Health about a study of more than 2,000 women, nearly half of whom had their babies at home.

Fifty-two infants in hospitals needed resuscitation compared with 14 at home. Six born in hospitals suffered neurological damage, while only one born at home suffered such damage.

Self-Serve Pumps Reaching a Peak

The self-service gas station is nearing the peak of its boom in Victoria and Vancouver, an Imperial Oil spokesman said Monday.

Expansion will come to a halt when the self-serve stations have about 50 per cent of the market, information director Allan Sinclair said.

"We believe the market will work best if there is a mix of self-serve and full-service stations. This will give customers a choice of the type of service they want."

Sinclair said self-service stations already have 35 per cent of the market. The figures apply to all oil companies operating in B.C. and not just Imperial Oil, he said.

The companies would also be watching with interest experiments being conducted by Exxon in some States, he said.

The U.S. oil giant is offering, on an experimental basis, discounts for cash because of the growth of credit card purchases.

In addition, it is experimenting with a few stations that sell gasoline at self-serve prices but the employee does nothing but pump the gas into the car.

"We are not conducting these experiments in British Columbia, but obviously we are watching them with great interest," Sinclair said.

The outlook for British Columbia is fewer but bigger service stations, with about half of them self-serve outlets.

"The public has become very price conscious and full-service outlets will have to become very efficient if they are going to remain competitive."

This involves closing some very small stations and consolidating others.

In addition, full-service stations will have to vigorously promote their repair activities in order to keep revenues high enough to show a profit.

"The dealer will continue to be the cornerstone of the service station business in British Columbia," Sinclair said.

Typically, independent dealers lease property from Imperial Oil or other companies and agree to purchase their gasoline.

By contrast, the self-serve stations tend to be owned and operated directly by oil companies.

At the moment, self-serve stations tend to be much larger than the full-service bays. For example, in the United States only 13 per cent of the stations are self-serve but they have captured more than 30 per cent of the market.

This trend will be reversed as oil companies assist the independent dealers to move into larger premises.

WHELAN AND HEWITT AT FARM CONVENTION

Both the federal and provincial agriculture ministers will address the 43rd annual convention of the B.C. Federation of Agriculture in Richmond Nov. 30 and Dec. 1.

B.C. Agriculture Minister Jim Hewitt will speak Nov. 30 at 2 p.m. and the federal minister, Eugene Whelan, will address the convention at 10:30 a.m.

Federation president Ralph Barichello said he hopes Hewitt would "bring with him a message that will provide the farmers of this province with some optimism as to the future of the agriculture industry.

"All has not been well with the industry during 1976. Continued rising costs and competition from low-cost imports along with generally poor weather conditions have left many segments of the agricultural community reeling," he said.

Barichello said he wants to see the government's platform implemented as soon as possible. The federation has been pursuing some issues for two or three decades, he said.

Some 40 resolutions will be debated during the course of the two-day convention, he added.

Circumstances Alter Penalty

Richard William Barker, 23, of 502 Craigflower, was given a suspended sentence Monday in county court and placed on probation for 10 months after pleading guilty to trafficking in marijuana Sept. 2.

Crown counsel Bill Southward told Judge E. J. C. Stewart that Barker was in the Old Forge cabaret, offered to sell an ounce of "weed" to a man who turned out to be an off-duty policeman, and was arrested. He said a jail term was warranted.

Defence counsel Ted Hanman, who reviewed Barker's past as a violinist and concert master when he attended Oak Bay senior high and University of Victoria, said his client had been drinking most of the day and evening. Barker had tried to sell marijuana to make up for a break-in in which he lost a stereo set and money he got from selling his violin.

He said Barker, who is unemployed, regretted what he did and wanted to enter the armed forces but because of his age and service requirements, he had to be clear of any offence with the law within 10 months.

Judge Stewart said he is aware of B.C. Court of Appeal decisions that trafficking is a serious offence but "I think there have been a substantial number of exceptions to the general principle that a jail sentence is required."

He said "our jails are too full at the moment" and "I really can't see how society is going to benefit from incarcerating this man" and "any sentence I might impose would be ineffectual in deterring anyone else."

Judge Stewart said he hoped Barker's intention to join the armed forces is carried out "and it is not simply an idea to avoid imprisonment."

He said a fine was inappropriate because Barker had no money.

Watched Death Kicks—Witness

VANCOUVER (CP) — A Port Hardy man told a B.C. Supreme Court jury on Monday that he lay on the floor of the police station drunk tank last April 1 as a prisoner was being fatally kicked by another and wondered if he would be next.

Clare Dool was giving evidence at the trial of Freddy Joe, charged with murder in the beating death of Charlie Russell.

Mr. Justice D. E. Andrews and a jury of six women and six men were told that the victim suffered serious brain damage in the drunk room kicking and died 11 weeks later in hospital without regaining consciousness.

The police station drunk tank was described by witness as a 10-foot by 13-foot cell located on the fifth floor of police station at Main and Cordova, is a completely tiled room devoid of any furniture where drunks are deposited for several hours while they sober up.

It contains a urinal at one end and an iron door at the other and is lit by light which can be regulated from bright to dim and often is a "gloomy, dark room," they testified.

Dool said he saw a man kicking another man in the head. The victim, he stated was lying down at the time.

"The other fellow was standing and he gave him two or three kicks," he said. "I stayed awake. I figured if this was going to happen here I was not going to be next."

Dool described the victim as an older man who was too drunk to do anything about the attack.

He said that the assailant rolled his victim around on the floor then came over to him and said he had enough change for a beer when they got out, and suggested Dool join him.

"I did not reply," said Dool.

The man then returned to the victim and administered more kicks to the head, Dool testified. He described the attacker as an Indian in his early 20s.

Dool admitted he had been drinking but denied he was drunk.

VAN STOLEN AT KNIFE-POINT

VANCOUVER (CP) — A resident of nearby Burnaby says he was held at knife-point and his van was stolen by a man who said he was one of four prisoners who escaped Saturday from the Lower Mainland Regional Correctional Centre (Oakalla) in Burnaby.

Lee Martin Chase, 23, said Monday he was locking his van early Saturday when a man grabbed him and forced him at knifepoint to drive him to Surrey.

Chase said it took about five minutes to untie himself, run to a phone and call police.

He said that during the drive to the river, his abductor told him his name, that he was a bank robber and that he had escaped from prison.

An RCMP spokesman in Burnaby said Monday that the abduction report was being investigated.

Police have caught three of the escapers.

Building Trade Dispute Solved

VANCOUVER (CP) — Another shutdown of B.C.'s troubled construction industry was averted by a late meeting Monday of the Construction Labor Relations Association and representatives of the International Union of Elevator Constructors Local 82.

Chuck McVeigh, CLRA president, said the meeting reached "a satisfactory settlement" to a dispute in which the elevator constructors were seeking a job security clause.

McVeigh said details of the agreement would be made public later.

The agreement followed more than 10 hours of discussion in chambers of the B.C. Labor Relations Board.

Earlier Monday, Jim Kinnaird, president of the B.C. and Yukon Construction Trades Council, said there could be a phased shutdown of CLRA operations unless the problem was resolved by the time the union's 72-hour strike notice was due to expire today.

"We support the elevator union and we are going to go in with joint action," said Kinnaird.

He said every other building trades union already has what the elevator constructors were asking for.

The 230 union members voted 89 per cent in favor of strike action last Tuesday.

At issue in the dispute was who said what during industry-wide marathon bargaining that ended in September with a verbal contract agreement.

Mike McManus, spokesman for the elevator constructors union, said CLRA, representing the five major elevator companies, agreed on three categories of non-union workers who could be bumped from a job site to make way for unemployed union members.

CLRA maintained only one category was agreed on, said McManus.

At peak construction periods non-union workers are given permits by the union to work when all members are already employed. They are later bumped or required to join the union.

CLRA represents 850 construction companies in the province.

The first closure this year affecting CLRA companies began June 30 when CLRA ordered its member companies to lock out workers belonging to 15 construction unions in response to strikes by the Cement Masons Union and the Carpenters Union.

Swan Approves Food Firm Sale

Agriculture Minister Jim Hewitt said Monday that an agreement has been reached between the provincial government and private shareholders of Swan Valley Foods in Creston that would allow the government to sell its interest in the company.

Shareholders will receive the agricultural assets of Swan Valley in return for their shares. They also will receive the irrigation and agricultural equipment of Swan Valley, which will enable them to carry out Swan Valley's original concept of major potato production in the Creston Valley.

The government will take the company's plant at Richmond and an almost-completed potato processing plant at Creston.

The government wants to sell those plants to a private operator, and the arrangement with the private shareholders is subject to the government being able to sell the plants.

The former New Democratic Party government originally got involved with Swan Valley Foods and bought 40 per cent of the shares.

Former agriculture minister Don Phillips noted several weeks ago that the government has invested almost $12 million in the company, and the company's losses are $2 million.

He sid then that an arrangement would be worked out where private shareholders would take over the agricultural end of the operation, and the government would sell its own interest.

Bays Win Cup; Thistles Right Out

By ERNIE FEDORUK
Times Staff

There have been saner seasons than this one for Greater Victoria High School Soccer League teams.

Oak Bay, cashing in on its quickness, captured the Colonist Cup and the league championship Monday, but guess who they're talking about today?

The non-winners.

It should have been a day for the champions to bask in glory. Instead, another technical dispute takes the play away from Oak Bay, the winners and still the champs as a result of Monday's 3-2 victory over Mt. Douglas Thistles.

The Thistles, who took the Lower Vancouver Island's second berth in the provincial tournament away from Reynolds Roadrunners by winning a controversial technical dispute last week, now have been declared ineligible for the British Columbia championships scheduled to start here Thursday.

So hold the fort, and beg Oak Bay's forgiveness for temporarily neglecting their champions.

Like a good soap serial, we'll set the stage by repeating what happened last week.

Oak Bay defeated Spectrum 6-2 and Reynolds beat Mt. Doug 4-1 in the cup semi-finals last week. The finalists automatically represent the district in the B.C. showdown.

Mt. Doug protested, however. Reynolds was found to have used an ineligible player, a replay was ordered and the Thistles won that round, 2-1, on Friday.

The sad news, for Mt. Doug, broke early Monday. The Thistles were not registered for the provincial finals and commissioner Brian Leeson of Abbotsford ruled Mt. Doug ineligible as Victoria's second representative.

Originally, teams had to be registered by Sept. 30 but Leeson extended that deadline to Oct. 15. As of Nov. 15, Mt. Doug still had not registered.

It would seem that the torch would be thrown back to Reynolds. Not so, claims coach Joe Becker of Spectrum, the other beaten semi-finalist.

At best, Becker feels, Spectrum and Reynolds should play off for the second spot.

Leeson doesn't think there's time, and feels the spot should be awarded to the second-place finisher in the league, which would be Reynolds.

Representatives of the Greater Victoria League were to huddle at noon today to rule on the problem.

One thing's for sure. They're not going to rule out Oak Bay.

The Bernie McNally-Dawes-coached Bays earned full marks for their victory at Royal Athletic Park. In winning, they became the first Oak Bay team in 30 years to score back-to-back successes in the city final.

For Mt. Doug, it added another chapter to a long frustration. Mt. Doug has never won the city cup.

The latest controversy surrounding Mt. Doug didn't enter into it. Frank Hitchmough and Ced Robb, who stepped in as sponsor and coach, respectively, when co-coaches Brian Cornall and Dave Barker resigned last month, knew of the Thistles' ineligibility but did not tell the players until after the game.

Barker and Cornall stepped down as a protest to Anti-Inflation Board rollback of teacher salaries.

Thistles, who trailed 1-0 at the half and twice by two-goal margins in the final session, fought to the wire but had no answer for Oak Bay's quickness or freshness.

McNally-Dawes substituted freely throughout the game. His manipulation of the bench prevented any weariness from creeping into Oak Bay's game.

On the field, the Bays' quickness and smart passing made the difference. Throughout the season, the Bays have consistently beaten their rivals to the ball. That quickness was again evident Monday.

Playing before a turnout of 1,024 fans, Oak Bay's "Portugese Connection" got the attack going. Louis DeFrias' excellent through pass put Joe Mendonca in the clear and the latter made no mistake at the 35-minute mark.

An equally-superb play, with Ken Martin sending Ed Lowe into the clear to score five minutes into the second half, made it 2-0.

Tim Elwell got that one back 13 minutes later, taking advantage of a defender's slip and getting away an excellent shot.

Another heads-up play restored Oak Bay's two-goal margin at the 35-minute mark. Mendonca quickly scored up the ball on the sidelines and tossed it in to Mike Ferrill. Ferrill, in turn, put Martin in the clear and he got away a good shot that Mt. Doug keeper Sandy Crisp handled but couldn't hold.

Mt. Doug protested, claiming the ball was still on the field when Mendonca picked it up. Referee John King ruled otherwise.

Thistles showed some of their best attacking form in the final 10 minutes and the pressure paid off three minutes before the end of regulation time when Tom Porter scored to make it 3-2.

Sandown: Mutuel Record Clincher for the Future

Sandown has passed another milestone, it's second under the patronage of the Capital City Turf Club, and with a total handle of $3,436,401 it's safe to say the sport of kings is definitely back to stay.

Last year, it will be recalled that the Island faithful braved rain, sleet and mud to welcome back the ponies after an absence of six years, the climax coming on the final day of the season when the mutuel take passed the magic $300,000 mark. That was the indicator.

This year the punters went over the top twice, the first time on Nov. 11 and again on Saturday when a record $337,304 was wagered. That was the clincher.

Of course, this has been the trend in the province the last few years. Exhibition Park in Vancouver has been going up steadily. For example, in 1970, the daily average at Ex-Park was only $307,000. This summer over the 104-day thoroughbred season, the average was a record $765,580, and twice the handle went over $1 million for a single day.

In terms of what was expected at Sandown, it will also be recalled that in 1975, the CCTC directors went into the venture hoping for a daily average of around $125,000. They came out with what they considered a bonanza of a daily average of $175,865.

This season, it was hoped they could equal last year's mark with the objective being another magic figure of $200,000. No problem; the punters came in record numbers and boosted the daily mark to $214,775, an increase of $38,910.

Not only that, but the popularity of the sport can be further emphasized by the fact that when the B.C. Jockey Club ran the meeting here in 1967, the daily average hit a peak of $116,000.

That's quite a difference for a track that couldn't make it pay back then.

It was Jack Diamond of the B.C. Jockey Club who said again before the inaugural meeting of last year that it wouldn't go. And he was almost right because there was a time in 1975 when a shortage of horses almost closed up Sandown.

Aubrey Davies, the racing secretary, spelled out that fact this year and praised the horsemen for keeping their horses running and that meet alive.

Then came success, Diamond was proven wrong, and Ed Popham and George Harknett, two of the prime movers behind the early negotiations for racing, were proven right.

This year, as opposed to last season when publicity director Harry Filon referred to Sandown's bettors as "a game lot, the weather was exceptional and Sandown likely won't ever have it so good again.

And the horsemen were excellent in the support they gave the meeting. The calibre of horses was much better than in 1975 and club president Ed Popham is right when he says a few more of the top claiming or allowance horses, are all that are needed to upgrade the meeting to its proper place.

There were several short fields in the feature events, whereas most of the others filled easily.

That doesn't mean there wasn't class. There was. Willies Revenge, who twice raced at Sandown and won, and scared off the opposition another time, is undoubtedly the best B.C.-bred three-year male in the province, while Gypsy Jewel, although she never won here, is similarly the best of the older division in her category.

Harknett's Major Hike gave up the honor of being the best three-year-old filly in B.C. to Title Victory, and it was unfortunate for Harknett that two such fine horses should come along in one season.

But Major Hike proved herself at Sandown. Girl horses aren't supposed to beat boys, but Major Hike doesn't understand such things as male chauvinism.

She beat the best boys on the grounds with the exception of Willies Revenge and should have a fine career ahead of her.

Now, it's wait until next season. And yes, it will be different without announcer Jack Short calling the tune. And therein hangs a tale. Once he lost a horse!

It was at the old Lansdowne track and one of the 12 horses which had started the race had simply disappeared and Short didn't find it until the field turned for home.

"Suddenly in the moat I spotted a jockey's head and four feet ahead of him a horse's head, covered in mud. They had come out of the gate all right but the horse had bolted, cleared the fence into the infield and jumped into the moat."

Adios Amigo! And good luck, from all of us.

Island Swim Meet

Swimmers from 15 schools will converge on Victoria's Crystal Pool for the annual Vancouver Island high school swimming championships Thursday.

Competition will get under way with heats starting at 8:30 a.m. Finals will start at 5:30 p.m.

Entries from the Greater Victoria area include Belmont, Claremont, Dunsmuir, Esquimalt, Lambrick Park, defending champion Mt. Douglas, Oak Bay, Reynolds, Shoreline, Spectrum and Victoria High.

Top finishers in the Island meet will qualify for the provincial championships to be held at Vancouver's Aquatic Centre on English Bay Dec. 3-4.

India Takes Cricket Test

BOMBAY (Reuter) — India beat New Zealand by 162 runs in the first cricket test at the Wankhede Ground Monday. New Zealand was all out for 141 in its second innings with less than 12 of the mandatory last 20 overs remaining on the final day. India scored 399 all out and 202 for four declared. New Zealand totalled 298 in its first inning.

Conduct of Rodgers 'Most Unprofessional'

MONTREAL (CP) — Coach Marv Levy of Montreal Alouettes says he will meet slot-back Johnny Rodgers this week to discuss his future with the Canadian Football League team, but the superstar's chances of convincing the coach he should stay in Montreal appear slim.

"Johnny's action on Friday night was the most unprofessional, bush league thing I've seen as a coach, and I told him so," Levy said of an incident in which Rodgers skipped a team meeting.

On Saturday in Hamilton, the Alouettes lost 23-0 to the Tiger-Cats in the Eastern Football Conference semi-final.

"I fined him heavily," Levy said, confirming that a newspaper report of a $500 fine was correct.

"On a winning football team there has to be almost love among the players for each other," Levy said. "We didn't have it this year. I'm afraid Johnny Rodgers was the reason."

Levy described Rodgers as potentially the greatest player in CFL history but now may be looking to divest the Alouettes of the former Heisman Trophy winner.

J. I. Albrecht, in charge of acquiring talent for Toronto Argonauts, has been reported to have come just a shade short of tampering with Rodgers in the past. If he is still interested — and he could be, because running back Anthony Davis purchased his contract back from the Argos on Monday — Rodgers presumably could wind up in Toronto.

Alouettes owner Sam Berger, who has to pay Rodgers $140,000 a season, is reported to have agreed to back Levy in whatever he decides is best for the team.

In three previous seasons, Rodgers' style sat well enough with his team-mates, but they soured on him this year when he dropped passes and began blaming everybody else, including quarterback Sonny Wade.

Rodgers has defended his conduct, saying he has "to do things my way," and suggesting his attendance at practice and team meetings is inconsequential compared with what he does on the field in a game.

Rodgers has seven years to run on a 10-year, $1-million contract, probably cutting seriously into the number of CFL teams that could afford him.

Unhappy Anthony Buys Up Contract

TORONTO (CP) — The Canadian Football League career of running back Anthony Davis came to an unceremonious end Monday.

Davis, 24, the college superstar who arrived in Canada six months ago with a five-year, $2-million pact in his pocket, bought his contract back from Toronto Argonauts and said he hopes to pursue his career in the National Football League.

Argos owner Bill Hodgson, who had hoped Davis would be the superstar the Toronto team needed to win the Grey Cup, made the announcement of Davis's departure just one week after Argos lost their final game of the regular season to Hamilton Tiger-Cats and finished out of the playoffs.

Mike Trope, Davis' agent who came from California to take part in the discussions, indicated Davis wanted to return to the U.S. to be close to a possible acting career and an opportunity to play in the NFL.

There were also reports of a rift between Davis and Argos coach Russ Jackson. Davis, injured early in the season, complained that the Argos were not using him enough, a fact brought out by looking at his season statistics.

"A.D. is a great athlete," said Dick Shatto, Argos managing director.

Hodgson, Davis and Trope signed the necessary papers to free Davis from his contract. In return for the release, Toronto received an undisclosed cash settlement.

Habs Heeded Hockey Just Enough to Win

MONTREAL (CP) — Even the players had trouble keeping their minds on the game at the Forum on Monday night.

Montreal Canadiens paid just enough attention to escape with a 4-2 National Hockey League decision over St. Louis Blues, but the crowd demonstrated more interest in results of the Quebec general election that were being flashed on a messsage board, showing a Parti Quebecois victory.

"It was a tough time," said Canadiens coach Scotty Bowman, generally pleased with the 16,193 attendance. "We didn't know it was going to be an election date or probably we wouldn't have played.

"The players kept an eye on the board, and they were talking about it between periods, but I couldn't pay too much attention because I had to change lines."

Bowman got back to hockey long enough to praise the work of Mario Tremblay and Doug Risebrough, each of whom scored a goal.

"Those two are really playing well," Bowman said. "They're scoring regularly and they're getting important goals."

Yvan Cournoyer and Steve Shutt, the latter with his 19th of the season, tops in the league, contributed Montreal's other scores. Larry Patey and Chuck Lefley replied for the Blues.

Montreal netminder Ken Dryden faced 25 St. Louis shots, while Eddie Johnston and Ed Staniowski in the Blues' goal handled 33 Montreal drives.

They'll Get Better

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Cowboys are off to their best start in history and still not playing well. Coach Tom Landry says he can't wait to see what happens when his National Football League team starts playing really well.

"This team will get better and better," Landry said Monday night after a 17-10 victory over Buffalo Bills. "It shows you something when you don't play well and still can win."

Dallas blinded Buffalo on two Roger Staubach-to-Drew Pearson passes that covered 61 yards in 13 seconds late in the second quarter. The touchdown put Dallas ahead 14-7 and the Cowboys never trailed.

"That drive just before the intermission was the big drive of the game," said Landry. "We never thought about sitting on the ball. We had plenty of time—I believe it was 26 seconds. We figure if we have 30 seconds and three time outs, we can cover 70 yards and at least get into field goal position."

Landry said the National Conference East title would come down to the Thanksgiving Day game against St. Louis in Texas Stadium.

Monday's victory gave Dallas a 9-1 record, the best start in the 16-year history of the club, and restored its one-game lead over the Cardinals.

Buffalo sank to a 2-8 mark and the Bills now have lost six consecutive games, the team's longest tailspin since 1972.

Drew Pearson had his finest game of the season. He caught nine passes for 135 yards against the blitzing Buffalo defence.

The Dallas defence keyed on O. J. Simpson, making his return after an enforced three-quarter rest for fighting against New England last week. Simpson was ejected after nine minutes of play against the Patriots for fighting.

Simpson gained 78 yards on 24 carries.

Meyer and Kneen Spark Laker Win

Merv Meyer and Brett Kneen came up with outstanding performances while guiding Lake Cowichan Lakers to a 9-4 triumph over Western Homes Buckaroos in South Island Big Hockey League action Monday night at Memorial Arena.

Doug Hanna added three goals to the up-Islanders' attack while single tallies were contributed by Rick Boyd and Dave Pettinger.

Rick Piechotta (2), Bill Pettinger and Dave Pettinger connected for Buckaroos while Steve Kishkan and John Lindsay combined to block 27 shots on the Victoria net.

Ed Van Impe Faces Charge

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Ed Van Impe, 36, of Pittsburgh Penguins of the National Hockey League, was arrested Monday and charged with disorderly conduct and making terrorist threats.

Police also arrested Ciro Iannucci, 43, of Brookhaven, Pa., and charged him with bribery, allegedly because he offered money to the arresting policeman to let Van Impe go.

Police said they were called by neighbors who saw Van Impe walking around in circles near a Philadelphia night spot.

To the Loser Goes a Chill

Someone's due for a cooling provided Victoria Cougars and Portland Winter Hawks pass up a tie in tonight's Western Canada Hockey League matchup at Memorial Arena.

Both have been playing warmly, so little wonder that some heat has been exerted in the Western Division. Only six points separate the top from the bottom.

Cougars, beaten only once in their last six starts, happen to be riding on top.

Portland, charging and with three games in hand over Victoria, looms more of a threat at the moment than Kamloops.

Portland's rise is reflected by the appearance of Wayne Babych among the league's scoring leaders. Babych has scored four goals and three assists in his past three games to crack the league's top 10 for the first time this season with 32 points.

Cougar winger Gregg Anderson and Brandon's Bill Derlago continue to set the scoring pace, each with 41 points. Victoria rookie Gary Lupul has moved into third, four points behind the co-leaders.

The hot runs being enjoyed by Cougars and Portland also has been reflected defensively. Both Randy Ireland of Portland and Victoria's Murray Bannerman came through with their first shutouts of the season during the past week.

Game tome tonight is 8.

Record Purse

LIVERPOOL, England (AP) — Prize money for the 1977 Grand National Steeplechase has been increased by $32,000 to a record $192,000.

SOETAERT SUSPENDED

CALGARY (CP) — Gary Soetaert of the Kamloops Chiefs has been suspended for one game for drawing five game misconducts this season, Ed Chynoweth, president of the Western Canada Hockey League, said Monday.

Chynoweth said the rule is intended to curb rough play in the league. A player who receives his fifth game misconduct is automatically suspended for one game and the suspension is increased by one game for each ensuing game misconduct.

"We do not feel the rule is overly harsh but it does emphasize to the players to use some self-control," the league president said.

SOCCER CANADA RESCUED

VANCOUVER (CP) — Canada's World Cup soccer team has found the $30,000 cash injection it needed to guarantee its survival, Soccer Canada chairman Herb Capozzi said Monday.

Capozzi said Labatt's Breweries of Canada Ltd. has contributed $20,000 and the Vancouver Whitecaps of the North American Soccer League have put up another $10,000 to enable the national team to continue its competition in the North, Central American and Caribbean World Cup qualifying zone.

Canada needed only one more tie-breaking victory over the U.S. to win second and final berth in the second World Cup round when contracts for professional players expired Oct. 31. With the new financing, Capozzi said Soccer Canada is seeking a new time and place to play its match with the U.S.

Although FIFA, the international body governing soccer, has asked that the game be played in 1976, Canadian officials are hopeful the match can be played in the spring in a neutral country, either Mexico or Bermuda.

SUPER SALARIES

Highly-Paid Stars Climb Money Tree

JULIUS ERVING
. . . $600,000 per year

First of a three-part series.

By FRED ROTHENBERG
The Associated Press

Editor's note: Million-dollar contracts are becoming almost commonplace in professional athletics. The top players are earning more in a year than many North Americans will make in a lifetime. This series will examine the salary phenomenon, looking at the development of the pay structure, the players' point of view and the future of the huge contracts. Today: Who makes the most and how these salaries got there.

For stuffing a basketball through a hoop with more dazzle than anybody else, Julius Erving makes $600,000 a year.

For throwing a baseball with more savvy than anyone else, Jim Catfish Hunter makes $250,000 a year, with a promised bonus of $1.5 million after the 1979 season.

For playing superlative hockey on a pair of gimpy knees, Bobby Orr was given a $3-million contract for five years. He will make the money whether he plays or not.

For being a football star in Buffalo, O.J. Simpson makes a reported $2 million for three years.

For giving North American soccer a shot in the arm, Pele was given a $4.5-million package for three years.

For four title fights and a bizarre exhibition with a Japanese wrestler, Muhammad Ali, possibly the most recognized figure in the world, grossed $13 million in 1976.

These figures don't even include the money athletes can make from endorsements, radio and television spots or post-season jobs. And they don't include daily expense money athletes get on the road and in training camp.

So is there any doubt that sports, a category of show business, is big business, too?

These high-paid athletes are considered to be the top stars in their profession. For their seasonal work, they compare favorably with top business executives.

The American Management Association surveyed the salaries of the chief executive officers for nearly 3,000 durable goods manufacturing companies. This year, the average salary ranged from $77,500 for the top executive in a company doing $10 billion to $25 million in sales to $247,000 for companies with sales of $500 million to $1 billion.

And what about the chief executive of the United States? He was making $200,000 a year, with numerous privileges and fringe benefits. His contract, however, was not renewed this year.

"I had a better year than the president," was Babe Ruth's famous 1930 remark in justifying his $80,000 salary, which surpassed Herbert Hoover's by $5,000. But when the Babe was earning big salaries for hitting home runs and attracting people into the ballpark, he was the only athlete who could play in the same financial league with the president.

Of the 1927 Yankees — perhaps the greatest team ever — Ruth made $70,000. But the other 25 players totalled only $200,000 - or about $8,000 a man. Herb Pennock, a 23-game winner the year before, had the second highest salary, $15,000.

★ ★ ★

In 1952, quarterback Sammy Baugh made $12,000; in 1960, quarterback Norm van Brocklin made $22,500, and in 1964, Sonny Werblin, owner of New York Jets, made quarterback Joe Namath a star and gave him $400,000 to sign with the new American Football League.

Namath's signing gave the AFL legitimacy, and that authenticity was the breakthrough for the NFL players' salaries. They finally had some bargaining leverage, the same advantage gained by the NBA and the NHL several years later.

Football salaries began to rise. Jimmy Brown made $60,000 in 1965, but it wasn't until the late '60s that the bidding war between the competing leagues led to skyrocketing salaries.

Depending on which side of the salaries you were on, the AFL and television were either the engels or the devils in the NFL's escalating salary picture.

"The main thing was that in those days baseball was making much more money than football," says NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle. "In the early 60s we were getting $150,000 a team from television. But in the late '60s television and the laws of supply and demand took effect.

"The salaries went up when the money became available. The key was 1965 and 1966 when the teams first got $1 million from television. Now the teams are receiving $2 million from television and the sport is generating more money than ever before."

Another key was the creation of the World Football League in 1974. The WFL, which expired after 1½ years, did raise the standard of living for some players who jumped leagues and some who were paid well to stay.

The WHA in hockey and the ABA in basketball did the same thing to the winter sports.

The arrival of the WHA spurred a bidding war for players with the NHL and resulted in higher salaries than hockey had ever known. Players such as Derek Sanderson, Bernie Parent and Gerry Cheevers went to the new league for large salaries only to return later to the NHL.

Bobby Hull gave the WHA credibility when he signed a multi-year, multi-million-dollar contract with Winnipeg Jets.

Now there is relative peace between the two hockey leagues with only an occasional player switching from one to the other and no bidding to prevent or induce it.

The ABA wasn't financially successful, but its presence and the fact that basketball rosters are relatively small helped the sport reach the highest level of salaries in the athletic kingdom.

Finally, the NBA owners decided it wasn't economically feasible to continue winning the battle with the ABA while losing the war of the chequebooks. A merger agreement creating a 22-team league was reached earlier this year.

Salaries, however, aren't going to return to previous levels. It's much too late for that.

With the high base of salaries already established and the new labor contracts permitting free agency in most of the sports, the super stars will still be earning the super salaries.

"An athlete deserves his fair share," says quarterback Roger Staubach of Dallas Cowboys, who earns an estimated $100,000 a year. "I've earned the position that I'm in. I produced and I'm paid well."

Staubach, Simpson, Namath and all the other professional athletes are not self-employed. Some person or conglomerate is paying their salaries.

(Tomorrow: Players discuss their market value.)

Ruth Leader in Take-Home Pay?

By The Associated Press

Babe Ruth's $80,000 salary in 1931 possibly gave him the most take-home pay of any athlete in the history of team sport.

In 1931, during the height of the Depression, the only tax on Ruth's $80,000 salary was an income tax, which amounted to $3,780 and left the famous home run slugger with $76,220. And that's not considering deductions.

The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics estimates that the dollar Ruth earned in 1931 would have a purchasing power of $3.79 today. That means his 1931 salary would be worth $288,874 today—after taxes.

Julius Erving may be making $600,000 in straight salary but, after taxes, the Internal Revenue Service estimates he isn't taking home more than $200,000. Again, this figure does not include deductions.

So it isn't surprising that Ruth's salary provoked a lot of editorial comment at the time, and the arguments being tossed around are all very familiar.

The Springfield Republican wrote: "The fact that all Ruth does is to slug the ball over the fence, and that outside of baseball he might take up successfully some gainful occupation such as that of a porter in a hotel, need not blind us to the economic justice of his income under the system of contract.

"Entertaining the public is a highly legitimate business. Here is a man who can do something better than any other man alive; the public appreciates it and willingly pays for the sight of it. Ruth's share of the profits is most honestly earned."

The Rochester Democrat and Chronicle wrote: "It remains only for the fans to show up at the gate in sufficient numbers during the summer to make the investment worthwhile. Ruth unquestionably is the biggest single attraction in baseball. His present salary is $15,000 a year more than commissioner Landis himself receives, and $5,000 more than the president of the United States receives, but neither would draw a nickel at the gate if dressed up in a baseball uniform."

The Ohio State Journal wrote: "Unquestionably, he is the biggest drawing card in the game, much bigger than Cobb or Speaker, or Rogers Hornsby. His employers might have paid him the $100,000 he asked and made a lot of money on him, if he behaves himself and has not begun to go back, as they say.

"But of course, considered in comparison with salary scales in other and probably more useful pursuits, even $70,000 a year for a baseball player is a laughable absurdity."

LONDON (UPI) — Eight men convicted of pulling off the world's biggest Bank robbery were sentenced by an Old Bailey judge today to a total of 100 years in prison.

Convicted for their parts in robbing the Mayfair branch of the Bank of America of $13.6 million, the defendants got sentences ranging from 18 months to 23 years.

Jailed for 23 years was grocer Leonard Wilde, 51. Car dealer Peter Colson, 32, got 21 years. Accountant William Gear, 44, was sentenced to 18 years.

Electrician James O'Loughlin, 38, got 17 years; decorator Henry Jefferey, 50, 12 years; grocer Henry Taylor, 38, six years; croupier Edward Gerty, 35, two years; and electrician Michael Gervaise, 32, 18 months.

World Beauties Dropping Out

LONDON (UPI) — The Indian government ordered Miss India today to withdraw from the Miss World Beauty Contest in protest against South Africa's racial policies.

Miss India, Naina Balsaver, was ordered to drop out because India wished to "disassociate" itself from an event that sanctioned South Africa's policies of racial separation, an Indian high commission spokesman said.

South Africa has a double entry in the Miss World contest — a black contestant and a white contestant. Three other nations have withdrawn contestants in protest.

The secretary of a South African anti-apartheid group, Chris De Broglio, told reporters that 10 other contestants were poised to pull out of the contest.

Miss Swaziland, Zanella Tshabalala, and Miss Mauritius, Anne-Lise Lesur, withdrew from the contest Sunday at the request of their governments.

Contest organizer Julia Morley said the withdrawal was requested, "until such time as there is one representative from South Africa, selected on a multiracial basis."

De Broglio said that India, Jamaica, Mexico, the Philippines, Malaysia, the Seychelles, the Bahamas, Yugoslavia, Sri Lanka and Trinidad are the countries contemplating pulling out of the contest. Mrs. Morley said that the competition would go on Thursday night, "even if all 10 countries leave."

Guerrillas Sentenced To Life

ISTANBUL (UPI) — A court sentenced two Palestinian guerrillas to death today for the Aug 11 murder of four passengers of an Israeli jetliner at Istanbul airport, then commuted their sentences to life imprisonment.

After the reading of the sentences, the handcuffed defendants, Mehdi Muhammed Zileyle, 22, and Huhammed Resit Huseyin, 23, shouted, "long live the peoples of Palestine and Turkey." Both gave the "V" for victory sign as troops led them away.

The two had pleaded guilty to premeditated multiple murder, a charge which under Turkish law carries an automatic death penalty.

But public prosecutor Mustafa Akduman at the start of the trial Oct 19 demanded only life imprisonment on the grounds of "provocation."

In statements read in court, Zileyle and Huseyin said they had flown from Tripoli to Istanbul on the orders of the Marxist Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine and had hurled a bomb and fired submachine guns at El Al passengers filing from the transit lounge to board a Tel Aviv-bound El Al jet.

Two israelis, an American diplomat and Japanese tour guide died in the attack and another 22 passengers were wounded.

Liz Needs $5 Million

LONDON — Elizabeth Taylor says she is having money worries. "I need $5 million for a hospital project in Botswana," she said. "Right now people don't want to contribute, but I'll make it: I believe passionately in this hospital." Miss Taylor also said that if she were to retire from acting she would not make an announcement. "It could be that I will decide to go into politics seriously," she said.

TRENTON — Elvis Presley will have to explain to New Jersey's highest court why he backed out of a deal to buy a luxury airplane once owned by financier Robert Vesco. The court disclosed Monday it has agreed to decide whether Vesco's bankrupt firm can collect damages from Presley for changing his mind about buying the sauna-equipped plane for $1.5 million. No hearing date was set.

RHODES, Greece — A father was sentenced to nine months imprisonment for using wasp-stinging punishment on his 12-year-old daughter to stop her from going out with boys. Court was told that Spyros Tsaroukos, a 50-year-old sponge-diver and father of nine children, strapped his daughter down in the family's backyard last July, smothered her face with sugar and honey, and left her out in the sun to be stung by wasps.

REDONDO BEACH, Calif. — Why would a 33-year-old carpenter get up every morning to watch television reruns of Rin Tin Tin. Lee Aaker says he does it to watch himself and relive the days 20 years ago when he played the boy, Rusty, in the series. "When I'm here, I always watch it," said Aaker, who left the show 18 years ago and has been out of show business since the early 1960s. When he turned 21, Aaker said the studio paid him a lump sum of about $100,000, and he spent the rest of the 1960s travelling around the world "as sort of a flower child." He gets little money from the reruns, he said, but received a residual cheque last month.

Taylor

SEDALIA, Mo. — Three years after he disappeared and six months after his burial service, Harold Goldberg, 67, wrote his wife to say he is alive and well. He said a loss of memory was responsible for his disappearance. But that created a new mystery: Who's the man in Goldberg's grave? Irene Goldberg said she had been reluctant to believe her husband was dead. But last April, a decomposed body pulled from the Missouri River was identified as Goldberg on the basis of a scar, a bent finger and missing teeth.

With that, Mrs. Goldberg arranged a funeral and resigned herself to being a widow.

Early this month her husband's letter arrived. He had lost his memory while driving home from a business trip in January, 1974, he said, and was working under a new name at a resort in Forsyth, 135 miles away in the Ozarks.

Marlboro Man May Ride Again

. . . No Call for Philip Morris

WASHINGTON (WP) — The Marlboro Man, who has not been riding across U.S. television screens since cigarette commercials were banned, may reappear briefly as the result of a controversy between the maker of Marlboros, Philip Morris, and a British television company.

"CBS's 60 Minutes has obtained the rights to the Thames Television production, which aired on Sept. 2 in Britain and juxtaposed "Marlboro Country" commercials with interviews of six aging men, allegedly "cowboys," who smoked heavily and became victims of lung cancer or emphysema.

Advertising Age reported this week that "in one segment of the devastating juxtaposition of the well-known ad approach, a victim of pulmonary emphysema is seen sitting on a horse with tubes running into his nose from an oxygen bottle strapped to his saddle. His doctors expressed certainty that the cause of the illness is his patient's heavy smoking."

Don Hewitt, executive producer of 60 Minutes said Monday, "we are seriously considering running the film. We have the rights to the film. We have to talk to our lawyers to see if there are any problems in showing the Marlboro commercials. We are going to do a story about the controversy. Philip Morris says the film is dirty pool. We want to know why it's dirty pool."

Following the showing of the film, which seen by an audience of 12-million viewers in England, Philip Morris had a Kansas City law firm seek to locate and interview the six men who had appeared in the film.

According to Advertising Age, the Kansas City law firm contacted five of the six men, the sixth Harold Lee of Pinedale, Ariz., had died Oct. 19 of lung cancer. The lawyers said in their report that there was considerable doubt that any of the six were "cowboys."

As one lawyer, David Shinn, put it," in no case was any of those persons depicted as cowboys (in the film) actually earning his living as a cowboy."

Peter Taylor, the reporter who narrated the film which appeared on Thames current affairs program, This Week, told Advertising Age: "We spent a lot of money and time on the film. We're too responsible to go out and fake interviews. Philip Morris is angry and trying to undermind our whole integrity."

Shopper Special Draws Hundred Calls an Hour

Times News Services

VANCOUVER — Calls are flooding in to Vancouver travel agent Jack McLaron at the rate of "about 100 an hour" wanting to book space on his next Seattle Shopper Special.

McLaron last weekend ran a two-day shopping trip to that city for about 750 bargain-hunters which resulted in an estimated $250,000 bonanza for satisfied Seattle storekeepers.

By the same token Frank Feeman of the Downtown Seattle Development Association just tried to make life easier for the friends from the north when they arrive:

"I hire a band and a dancing girl to greet the train," he said.

He also passed out shopping bags with coupons good for free items and money off on others.

One large department store opened a Canadian lounge for the occasion.

"For years Canadians have been coming down here and shopping . . . and it's our way of saying thanks," said Feeman.

The roundtrip cost was $34.50 which included two nights in a hotel, double occupancy.

"Some people commented they can pay for the trip, shop and still come out ahead," Feeman said.

What did they buy? Almost everything.

A Burnaby housewife was happy she found a perfumed cosmetic soap selling for $2 that cost $4.95 in Vancouver. A Vancouver woman bought two dolls for about $7 each that go for more than $15 back home. For $70 in Seattle a man with a shaggy dog could buy a deluxe pair of electric pet clippers. The price for Fido's shears in Vancouver — $120.

Exhausted from bargain-hunting, a Canadian bought a $3 sandwich and called it a steal.

MICK JAGGER spent two days playing harp and singing background with bluesman Luther Allison at P.S. Studios on the South Side of Chicago.

"Weren't a dull moment from beginning to end, just like playing in a good bar," said Allison. "Mick's beautiful and he's way into the blues."

The two met through Ron Wood, who heard Allison play in St. Tropez on the French Riviera this summer.

"Some of the older guys play as well as they did years ago, but they don't sound as good because the newer studios clean up the music," said Winter. "This record's gonna be dirty, nasty, low-down blues. Muddy's influenced everybody in rock and roll and he deserves more recognition. Maybe some younger white people will buy his records now."

"No, I'm sorry to see him go. He's one of our senior comedy heads and I'll miss him. We've discussed doing a movie together but I'm reluctant to leave television because it's a discredited art form."

The cast presented Chase with a cake in the shape of him doing his Jimmy Critic imitation and a photograph with the inscription, "We'll miss you . . ." including an expletive in the tradition of Earl Butz.

"Officially, Chevy's off the show forever," said producer Lorne Michaels at the subdued party. "But this is his family and everyone visits his family."

Chase confirmed he had discussed the possibility of collaborating on a movie with O'Donoghue, though his plans remained indefinite.

THE EAGLES' album, Desperado, is being made into a Broadway play and-or movie, but the Eagles aren't cooperating.

The management firm of Leber-Krebs optioned the rights to the material from Warner Bros. Music earlier this year over what Eagles manager Irving Azoff said were his "screaming" objections.

Warner Bros. had purchased the rights from David Geffen, Asylum Records' founder.

Azoff said that prior to buying the rights to the Desperado material, Leber'Krebs approached the Eagles with a proposal. "We totally rejected it," Azoff said.

"Aesthetically, we don't think they're the right people to do it," adding that the Eagles would sue Warner Bros. over the material and "related other claims."

Steve Leber's comment: "Two years ago, when the Eagles weren't as big, we told Azoff about our concept. He told the Eagles and they were ecstatic. As they got bigger, Irving became less enthusiastic. But we'd love the Eagles to stay involved."

Massive Sewer Bill In Ten Mile Project

A proposed housing development of apartments, townhouses and single-family homes on 70 acres at Ten Mile Point will generate "massive servicing costs," Saanich council was warned Monday.

Broadmead Farms Ltd. proposes to build 82 single-family homes, 62 townhouses and 66 apartments on a site lying between Telegraph Bay Road and Bedford-Phyllis Avenues, commonly known as Prevost Mountain.

Municipal planner Gil Laurenson told the council his department supports the project from a land-use and development viewpoint but warned of the costs.

"Because of the massive servicing costs concerned with this area generally, and the urgency of applying available municipal funds to commercial and industrial areas of assessment revenue generating potential, this area has a very low priority in the corporation's program of planned development, based on the Ward study recommendations," Laurenson advised council.

Laurenson said less than 50 per cent of the area is within the sewer enterprise and it is unlikely this can be extended in view of the Pollution Control Branch's demands for upgrading by December 1977.

Laurenson said that even if it is possible to extend the enterprise most of the area would have to be pumped, involving major costs.

Heavy costs would also be involved in upgrading the existing water supply adjacent to the site, Laurenson said.

The council agreed with Ald. Sandy Noel, public works chairman, that the developer be asked how much his company is willing to pay toward servicing.

The Broadmead proposal will be referred to council's lands, planning and housing committee.

Candidate Sues Sun Columnist

Armored Drivers Still Out

About 65 drivers and guards employed by Brink's Canada Ltd. and Loomis Armored Car Service Ltd., remained on strike in Vancouver today.

The employees, members of Local 351 of the Teamsters Union, did not report for work at the end of the weekend to back proposals for a new contract.

Ed MacIntosh, union business agent, said today the companies' employees in Victoria are non-union and therefore are not affected by the strike.

The drivers and guards, who have been without a contract since June, now average $7.75 per hour.

MacIntosh refused to say what the wage demands are. He said he did not want to jeopardize his lines of communication with the companies.

He said, contractual language rather than wages was the major issue.

"We hope to be meeting with the companies in the near future," he said.

Group Pressured Council—Ald.

A Central Saanich alderman charged Monday night that a candidate in Saturday's municipal election put inproper pressure on council to hold a recreation referendum in connection with the election.

However, Ald. Donald MacLaurin was unable to back up his charge involving aldermanic candidate Gardo Gurr because council rejected his request to make public a "secret" letter.

Outside the meeting, MacLaurin disclosed the contents of the letter dated Oct. 4, 1976, to Mayor Jean Butler from Gurr, chairman of Citizens for Tri-Municipal Recreation.

The letter states that as a condition of the citizen group's support on a recreational referendum, council must rejoin the tri-municipal recreation commission.

Another condition was "hold a referendum in conjunction with the November municipal elections to join North Saanich and Sidney to add a curling rink, without a grant if necessary, to be amortized by present municipal sharing formula under the aegis of the Capital Regional District."

Gurr said in an interview Monday night that anyone has a democratic right to bring pressure on council if they don't feel council is doing what they feel should be done.

Mayor Butler said today Gurr's letter was not secret and was addressed to her and not to council.

She said it was given to her by Gurr at a meeting during which the citizens' group voiced an opinion on the recreation project

"He (Gurr) did not pressure us, he just came in to discuss the matter with us," she said.

She said she feels it is only right that the people decide in a referendum whether they want the recreation centre.

Owners Could Get 3 Years Tax Rebate To Repair, Maintain Houses

Heritage Home Upgrading Fund

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

A proposal to offer home repair and maintenance grants to owners of designated heritage homes, equivalent to their annual gross property taxes, was presented today to Victoria city council.

If the policy is adopted, and if most of the 78 designated bylaws now before council are given final approval, it is estimated that the program's cost to the city next year will be between $50,000 and $55,000.

But Victoria has a gut feeling that it won't have to bear this cost burden alone for more than a few months.

Apparently pinning a lot of faith on the well-known heritage sympathies of newly-appointed Recreation and Conservation Minister Sam Bawlf, city council hopes that the provincial government will step in and share the cost of the financial incentives in a program that will eventually embrace all B.C. municipalities.

Although the proposal was scheduled for consideration at this afternoon's council caucus meeting, it was already being discussed enthusiastically Monday during a council tour of 13 properties which are included in the list of 78 buildings proposed for designation.

To date the only form of financial assistance contemplated by the city for heritage home owners has been a 15 per cent no-string-attached exemption from property taxes in 1977.

But under the latest plan, that bylaw would be scrapped and the city would establish a Heritage Improvement Fund administered by a non-profit society or some other form of association.

Into the fund from the city's general revenues would be pumped a cash sum equal to the annual gross property taxes (excluding any local improvement tax) of all eligible, designated properties.

The owners of designated heritage buildings that are "used exclusively for residential purposes" would then be able to apply to the fund administrators (probably consisting of three council members, two city officials and one member of the Heritage Advisory Committee) for grants to "restore, improve and maintain" their homes.

They would be able to apply for maximum grants equal to three years' gross property taxes, depending on the nature of the repairs needed. Full property taxes would continue to be paid in the usual way.

In its present form, the proposed incentives program would limit such grants to the improvement and upkeep of building exteriors, although they would also be available for upgrading "structural integrity" (foundation, for example) and such things as fencing and private sidewalks.

After submission of the application form a city building inspector would visit the property to verify that the work was, in fact, required.

The applicant would have to obtain at least two estimates and after the work was completed a second inspection would be carried out before the grant was issued.

As aldermen visited heritage homes in the Rockland, Fairfield and Victoria West areas Monday, talking to some of the owners, there was clear evidence to support the claims that many of the homes in question are sadly in need of repair and improvement.

Apart from an obviously needed coat of paint on the exterior, the building looked in sound condition. But the owner, carpenter Kurt Schmidt, told council members most of the house has no proper foundations.

Like many of its era, it's built on post-and-rock. Schmidt wants to get around to tackling the job, but said the cost is against him.

When Ald. Bob Wright asked him how he would feel about a special fund to provide assistance in such cases, Schmidt indicated the help would be welcome.

But Mayor Mike Young later admitted that the heritage fund as now proposed stands more to benefit "heavily tax-loaded" properties than homes like Schmidt's, where gross taxes are only about $360 a year.

He and Ald. John Hayes, who is one of the two council representatives on the Heritage Advisory Committee, said further refinements might be needed to the basic formula so that financial help might be more fairly distributed.

"We are going to have to come up with a mixed bag of goodies in the way of incentives and encouragement," said Hayes.

One of the first stops on the four-hour heritage tour was 1171 Rockland, a residence-turned-boarding-house which the report termed "a major landmark structure in its own right . . . a very fine example of the Edwardian Queen Anne style"

Owner Lawrence Jones has organized a petition among owners of the 78 homes proposed for designation, and says he has obtained 50 signatures.

"Yet you are still going through with this," he protested Monday.

The mayor told Jones there was no basis for the fears that designation might result in financial hardship.

Quite the reverse applied, he said. "If you don't have this house on the designated list you might lose money. If we designated it you would probably have enough money returned to do a lot of your outside repairs."

Young added: "There is no way this house is worth anything but the way it is." If new development replaced it, the site restrictions would not yield anything like such a high financial return.

TOWN TALK

If the price of chicken feed goes up, the farmer has to get more for his eggs. We all agree with that.

But the one-cent a dozen increase the farmer receives turns into a two-cent increase on the store shelves.

But if there is a legitimate reason for the short-shrift to the consumer, how come it doesn't work the other way around?

The Egg Marketing Board said Monday chicken farmers would receive two cents a dozen less for their eggs because the price of chicken feed went down.

There's something rotten in the area between the farmer and the consumer.

A lesson developers learn when dealing with Saanich is that patience is just as necessary as financial backing.

One developer learning the hard way is S. J. Johal who wants to build an apartment building at 856-858 Seymour.

Council was told Monday Johal bought the property in March and on March 16 was informed the Ward and Associates study recommending guidelines for developing the area, was soon to be received.

He's still waiting for an answer.

As Ald. Roy Wootten quipped, "You have to be patient. After all, he only bought it in March, that's only seven months."

He also said he can not understand how Conservative Joe Clark can hope to persuade the voters to make him prime minister when he can not even persuade his wife Maureen McTeer, to change her name to his.

There's only so long that people can hold their breath or keep their fingers crossed so the people at The Belfry on Gladstone are hoping Manpower and Immigration Minister Bud Cullen won't take long in making a decision, says Rick Brownsey, Belfry administrator.

It's up to Cullen now, whether surplus federal funds made available through the member for Comox-Alberni, will be turned over to the Belfry to avoid the shutting down of the much used cultural centre.

A letter from Victoria M. P. Allan McKinnon, in response to more than 50 individual letters and a 2,300-name petition, says that the re-allocation of surplus funds is now in the minister's hands and he, McKinnon, "can only hope for the best."

Driver Badly Injured

Lyle Bruce Dobbyn, 1731 Cedar Ave, was found unconscious behind the wheel of his car in the 5800-block of West Saanich Road at 2:24 a.m.

Saanich police took him to hospital with head and chest injuries and internal bleeding.

Police said it appeared Dobbyn had been driving south and the car missed a curve, going off the pavement and striking a tree on the east side.

Bed Shortage Forces RJH Surgery Delay

Dr. A. C. Pickles, executive director, said the hospital continues to be jammed with patients and those not requiring surgery have spilled over into beds usually occupied by those who do.

That means that while there is time available in operating rooms there is no place to put patients before and after.

Emergency and urgent surgery is being done, said Pickles. But it's the lucky patient who gets into hospital on schedule for elective surgery.

At one point last week the hospital had 42 more patients than it is supposed to hold when full, he said.

There are a total of 960 beds in the Jubilee complex, about 700 of them for acute care patients. Sixty of these 700 are now occupied by patients not needing that level of care but with nowhere else to go to get the lesser care they do require.

Pickles said the hospital suffered the same sort of space crisis last November and he has no explanation for why it is happening.

Jubilee encountered problems of another sort as well Monday, having to put out an urgent call for blood when supplies dwindled.

Jerry Savage, spokesman for the Red Cross, said today a clinic scheduled Monday had only produced three of the 15 units of A positive and A negative by about 6 p.m. so he broadcast a radio appeal.

That brought a crowd of donors to Red Cross House, pushing the day's total to 174, well past the target of 160. In all, 29 pints were hurried to Jubilee. Another clinic, at 1046 Fort, continues to 8 tonight.

Aldermen Rap Bawlf Brief

In his controversial housing report for the provincial government, Recreation and Conservation Minister Sam Bawlf is "using a sledge-hammer to drive home a tack," Victoria Ald. Bob Wright said today.

Wright told a city housing committee meeting that Bawlf seems to favor scrapping the present land-use contract system in guiding new development because some municipalities have abused the system in the past by charging developers high impost fees for off-site service costs.

But in taking this stand the minister is overlooking the fact that generally land-use contracts have proved an effective planning tool, he said.

Claiming that Victoria is "blameless" on all the points raised by Bawlf in his criticisms of municipalities, Ald. Murray Glazier said the city traditionally uses land-use contracts to "get the project to conform to our ideas on how it should be."

He said the system tends to favor the developer rather than the city, however, because it provides a means of bypassing physical site constraints and regular zoning rules.

But Mayor Mike Young argued there is some validity to the claim that this procedure allows for public exposure of the development proposal at too late a stage.

By the time a public hearing is held the scheme has already wound its way through surveys, architectural drawings, submissions to planning department and advisory commissions, he noted.

"It is frustrating to the public and it is frustrating to the developer (if the latter has his plans turned down after months of preparation)" Young said.

City planning director Geoff Greenhalgh was instructed to prepare a critique on Bawlf's report.

Gap on Yates Eyed Next For Spruce-Up

The 600-block Yates Street, now a plain filling in the otherwise fancy "sandwich" of the 500 and 700 blocks, may also be prettied-up by the city of Victoria — if businesses on the block are prepared to help foot the bill.

A proposed $246,000 uplift was discussed today by the city's roads and traffic committee.

City engineer John Sansom said the scheme envisages some widening, realignment of curbs, sidewalk renewal, extra lighting and the installation of planters and trees.

Sansom said it is also proposed to erect a "nice design" bus shelter in the north side of the street, but in that case businesses there may be asked to remove their "rather untidy collection of canopies."

The merchants will be asked to pay $153,000 of the $246,000 through a long-term local improvement levy on their taxes.

City manager Jim Bramley recommended that the city's $93,000 share be found from the tax sale land account. Officials were instructed to sound out business opinion on the proposal.

RAPE CHARGE AGAINST BOY

Saanich police Monday arrested a 16-year-old boy in connection with a report of rape in Gordon Head at 10 p.m. Sunday.

The boy appeared in family court charged with breaking and entering with intent to commit rape.

Saanich police are still investigating a second alleged rape Sunday night in which a girl hitch-hiker was picked up on Burnside Road and taken to Prospect Lake.

Credit Cards Trip Waitresses, Tip Off the Taxman

By AL FORREST

The credit card age is making it difficult for waitresses who cheat on their income tax.

Customers charging a meal may also charge the tip, providing a written record for the tax man.

"This gives us a basis to calculate the amount of tips received by each waitress during the year," says Stan Jenkins, Revenue Canada's chief of audit for the Victoria region.

Now, however, if a Victoria waitress has served $20,000 worth of meals on credit cards in 1975 and received $5,000 worth of tips, there is reason to believe she may have received a total of $10,000 worth of tips during the year if a check shows she served another $20,000 worth of meals on a cash basis.

Not that she will be automatically assessed the extra $10,000.

"The figure is just a starting point. We sit down with the person concerned and discuss the various factors," Jenkins said.

Pat Kelly, who directs field operations of the team of investigators, said many factors are taken into consideration when assessing the amount of tips likely received during the year.

In the example given, the person may have received less or more than the $10,000. For example, while people may tend to leave larger tips when they charge than when they pay cash, others may have charged the meal and left a tip in cash.

After a lengthy discussion between the waitress and a Revenue Canada official, the appropriate total is decided and added to the tax bill. If the waitress refuses to discuss the matter, Revenue Canada can assess the appropriate amount without discussion.

If the taxes have been clearly evaded, the waitress could be faced with a 25 per cent penalty plus a fine in addition to the back taxes owing.

This type of thorough check will be made at all major restaurants in the Victoria area this year. Some of the smaller food outlets also will be checked.

"We can't do them all, it wouldn't be possible," Jenkins said.

Any other employee who receives tips will be checked in a similar way, he said.

Tax cheaters can avoid the 25 per cent penalty and fine by making a voluntary disclosure that they have evaded taxes, Jenkins said.

Anyone making a voluntary disclosure is still liable for the taxes owing plus interest but will not be fined, provided the disclosure is thorough and voluntary.

If a waitress learns she is under investigation and decides to make a disclosure, this is not considered voluntary. She must make it before the investigation begins.

In addition, if only some tips are reported, the waitress could be fined if further investigation shows there were other tips received which were deliberately concealed from the tax office.

Kelly said that, with all major food outlets being monitored, it would be difficult for a waitresss to conceal tips for an extended period.

"If they are not caught this year, they may be caught next year and they are almost certain to be caught at some time. Then their whole file can be investigated to check previous years."

Jenkins said the number of voluntary disclosures has been "disappointingly small," just a couple a year and usually the result of a news story of someone in a similar situation being charged by Revenue Canada.

"We would like to see far more people making voluntary disclosures but the majority of people seem to prefer to gamble they won't get caught. It may turn out to be a poor gamble."

Pruning Time for Apple Trees

Whether you want to restore vigor to that aging apple tree in the backyard, ensure the success of a recently planted sapling, or increase the yield of a whole orchard . . . you'd do well—especially now, while the sap's down and the leafless branches are easy to see—to explore the advantages you can derive from a little judicious tree pruning.

THE MOTHER EARTH NEWS

Few things are as beneficial to a fruit tree as regular pruning. A properly trimmed tree is not only more pleasing to the eye than its untrained counterpart, but can yield more and better fruit AND live a healthier life . . . all of which adds up to money in your pocket.

And speaking of money, tree pruning is a marketable skill that can pay your bills if you live anywhere near commercial orchards.

The main tools you'll need to do a good pruning job are: a small pruning saw, a saw mounted on pole (for reaching those high, thick branches), hand loppers (lopping shears), and pole loppers (for topping and high work). You'll fine these items at most large nursery and garden supply outlets.

In case you've ever wondered, a pruning saw differs from a carpenter's saw in two ways: (1) the pruning saw has coarser, thicker teeth that are less likely to bind up than an ordinary saw's, and (2) it's made to cut—usually—on the pull stroke. Each of these features can be a definite advantage when you're working atop a ladder or a branch and you can't afford to lose your balance.

Prune at any time of year, although a great deal of cutting in early spring may cause excessive loss of sap. The owners of commercial apple orchards usually do their trimming in the winter, when they have time for the job and when tree outlines are most distinct.

Pruning is not performed when the temperature falls below 20 defrees F., as such frigid conditions can cause dieback in trimmed limbs.)

If you intend to work with long-neglected trees, you can spot dead limbs and branches more easily when the tree is still bearing leaves . . . in the summer.

Summer's also the time to check unwanted sucker growth. These unproductive shoots usually arise from old cuts, limb junctions (crotches), or spots near the tree's base. Although they're easily pulled out the first time they appear, such shoots—once established—must be nipped with loppers or sawed off.

(Hint: When you cut away a sucker, leave as little stub behind as possible . . . as with any pruning cut. This'll not only prevent recurrent sucker growth but promote proper healing of the wound.)

Begin by removing dead wood, which only invites insect and fungal growth (and ultimately-heart rot), from your tree or trees. You can probably should—dress large cuts with a special paint made for the purpose (see your garden shop), or with ordinary, non-leafed, oil-base exterior paint.

Once you've trimmed away all dead tissue, look for crossing limbs. (On older trees, you may have to sort out whole whorls of tangled branches.) Such a "mare's nest)' is undesirable, since the limbs—if they rub—can scrape each other's bark and damage fruit and because the growth of too many branches in one place tends to tie up the tree's energy (thereby limiting the amount and size of its fruit). The remedy is to remove one or the other of any crossing limbs.

If the tree's getting too tall or too wide, don't hesitate to cut it back. The usual practice when training young trees is to nip the tips of most branches back one-third to one-half the previous year's growth. (You can determine yearly growth—after the first years of pruning—by closely observing the segments on the branches.)

Cutting trees back not only promotes the development of heavier branches but controls any spreading or reaching tendency. (If you cut back into older wood, however, you may severly limit—or altogether stop—new growth.)

It's generally a good idea—when you remove excess branches from a major limb or large branch—to leave intact those shoots that come off the sides (although even these quite often need to be thinned).

Under branches arising from the bottom of a limb or branch—are usually weak and should be removed . . . as should branches that grow out of the tops of others (the exception being when the growth in question is at the end of a branch).

Upward-growing branches often get out of hand and drain too much energy from a main limb. Such growths—called water sprouts—can ruin the form of a tree by reaching up into higher branches, where they cause rubbing, entaglement and general chaos. Hence, they should be nipped.

Finally, remove any branches that grow back toward the center of a tree, as these wayward growths tend to limit the light so necessary to the proper ripening of fruit.

Most tree training is now of the "central leader" type. This method has been described as "trying to make an apple tree look like a Christmas tree" . . . and—except for the fact that the ornaments arrive a little early—it's an apt description.

The central leader is nothing more than the main branch that grows straight upward in the middle of the tree. Making sure that this bough remains the leader takes a considerable amount of care. Usually this means nipping it very little (certainly less than any side branches), so as to promote its growth.

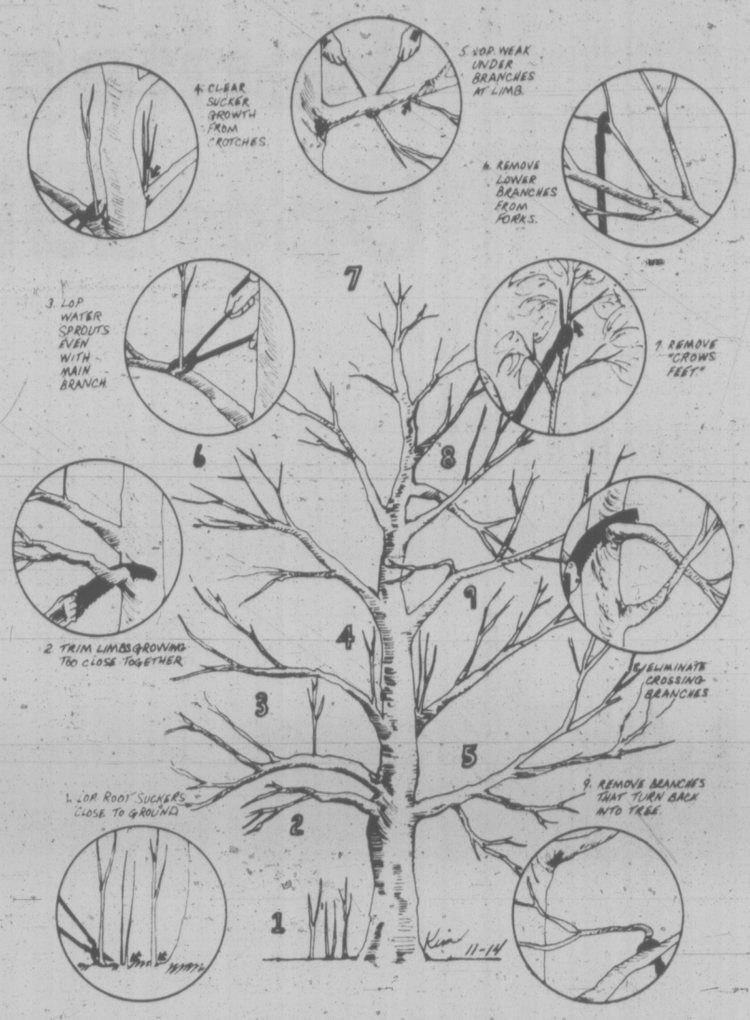
Branches that emerge laterally from the central leader should be spaced a few inches apart, and spread around the trunk. (That is, they should not occur two-in-a-row, one right-on top of another.)

It's also usually a good practice to eliminate "crow's feet" or forks from the ends of all branches. This is especially important in the case of the central leader, which mustn't be allowed to choke itself off in a short, fan-shaped spray.

This piece, of course, is by no means intended to be adefinitive treatise on the subject of tree pruning. Never attempt to prune a large tree singlehanded. Limbs are often heavier than they appear . . . and if one gets out of hand, it could easily cause severe property damage and-or personal injury. Also bear in mind that a misstep while climbing a tall tree—or a momentary loss of balance while making a cut—can lead to disaster.

If you have any doubts about your ability to trim a tree, seek the services of a professional. (Look under "Tree Service" in the Yellow Pages.) A tree surgeon's fee may be high . . . but the alternative might be a long stay in the hospital.

Nonetheless, if you apply the basic rules I've set down here—with caution—you should find yourself next summer with a yard or orchard full of stronger, more beautiful, and healthier apple trees . . . each of which could easly be loaded with an extra bushel or two of juice red—or yellow-splotched bounty.



indoor gardens

By LYNN and JOEL RAPP

Now that autumn is upon us, the indoor plants will be adjusting, just as we will. We must stop fertilizing our plants and allow them to rest until early spring. We are all mothers to our plants family and must provide seasons for them, as they become easily confused.

Move the plants away from the window pane. If the plants are touching glass, they will be negatively affected because glass is a conductor for heat and cold. Be aware of draughts near the windows. Soon the artificial heat will be turned on. Plants suffer in unnatural surroundings, so keep your house or apartment as cool as possible. Turn on the heat just enough to remove the chill and if you're out during the day, remember that the plants prefer it COOL. If it's too cool for you, put on a sweater and throw an extra blanket on your bed.

Just as plants droop and generally lose their vigor in overheated rooms, so do we. Heat is drying (our skin shows it, our sinuses act up), so provide as much humidity as possible when you must turn on the heat. The light situation changes also as winter comes on, so beware of these changes and prepare your plants accordingly. Don't have great expectations for your green family during the winter months, they slow down when summer ends. Do not stimulate them. Just understand they are meditating and gathering energy . . . for you.

Donors Missing

BRANTFORD, Ont. (CP) — The local branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society reported a poor turnout at the last blood donors' clinic. Only 167 blood donors attended the clinic. This was well below the branch's quota of 250 units of blood. The monthly requirement for the three local hospitals is about 250 units of blood.

Her Male Roommate Upsets Parents

DEAR ABBY: My daugher was recently transferred to a large city where the crime rate is very high. She is 29, unmarried and self-supporting, and she has always had very high moral standards. She told us that she would try to find a roommate to share expenses.

She telephoned us last Sunday to say she's found a very nice gentleman who is now her roommate! She assured us that she rented a two-bedroom apartment, that everything was on the up and up and that there was no romantic interest whatsoever! She explained that a male in the apartment is much better protection in a big city than another girl is. He is 33, single, of course, and an assistant coach at a high school.

Abby, I believe our daughter and trust her. When I told her father, he said maybe it will be "innocent" for a while but not for long. Also, when people find out she's living with a man, her reputation will suffer. What do you think? —OLD FASHIONED PARENT

DEAR OLD-FASHIONED: A self-supporting 29-year-old woman is old enough to select her own lifestyle, and I think her reasons for preferring to share an apartment with a man are valid.

As for her reputation suffering: It won't suffer among those who really know her, and that's what counts.

DEAR ABBY: One of your readers suggested national Daughter-In-Law Day. Well, I'm a daughter-in-law but I had all the honor I need in just knowing and loving a mother-in-law. I'll tell you about her.

She was a diamond in the rough, a tiny, fiesty redhead. Had she been a man, she would have been a two-fisted, hard-drinking gambler. She adored her son. No woman alive was good enough for him, but if one had been, it would have been me. When she had a snootful, she berated me, insulted me, baited me. She came very close to loving me, and perhaps she did.

I was with her the day she broke her hip. She was barefooted, in a chartreuse bathing suit, having just come in from a day at the local swimming hole with her two small grandsons and myself. That was the beginning of the end.

I gave her a permanent the day before she died, and as she left to go home, she put her freckled arms around my waist and in her deep, husky voice said, "I love you, honey." Those were her last words to me.

How I loved that tough old lady, and I miss her like hell. —MARTHA.

Patient-Doctor Relationship

By LESTER L. COLEMAN, MD

In one of our discussion groups much comment arose about the intimate relationship between a certain psychotherapist and his patient. Someone brought up the widely circulate story of a psychoanalyst who became sexually involved with one of his patients. How did you react to that story?—Mrs. M. O.S.

Dear Mrs. S.:

The relationship between a physician in any field and his patients is a highly complicated one. The dependency that arises is responsible for the solid interfacing between the two. Out of this often emerges a very valuable and concentrated devotion.

In psychotherapy, the forces of "transference" and "counter-transference" between doctors and their patients can become highly charged. Such a relationship also exists between male psychotherapists and their male patients.

With female patients, the intricacies are even more complicated when the therapist is a male. It is not uncommon for the patient to temporarily feel she is in love with her therapist. He represents to her the figure of authority, strength and support. This, coupled with his sensitivity to her emotional needs, makes him a formidable structure in her life.

Psychoanalysts understand this mechanism, are aware of its importance and avoid the pitfalls of such an intimate relationship.

Highly trained psychotherapists are very adept at utilizing his "transference" situation for the greatest advantage to the patient.

The exploitation or violation of that faith by the therapist is a sad testimonial to the principles and ethics of psychotherapy. Fortunately, such a complication occurs rarely and must not be considered by those in psychoanalysis, or those who are contemplating psychoanalysis, as a potential threat to the value of such therapy.

Your discussion group will be impressed by a new book, "Betrayal," by Lucy Freeman. It is published by Ginger-Stein and Day.

Ms. Freeman has established herself as a sensitive and authoritative writer on psychoanalysis and its many variations. In this new book, she presents the true account of a relationship between a psychotherapist and his patient. She traces that relationship from its inception to its ultimate betrayal by the doctor.

With great awareness, she does not absolve the patient completely. Rather, she treats the problem objectively as a case study from which both analyst and patient may learn the unhappy complications of such a departure from the fine ethical principles of psychotherapy.

DR. COLEMAN welcomes letters from readers. Please write to him in care of The Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, B.C.

Mirrors are not only a necessity, they can enhance any room and make it appear larger.

The illustrated 8-page booklet "Installation Of Mirrors" explains the different ways you can install mirrors. In addition, it points out that the silver deposit on a mirror should not only be protected against scratches but also against chemicals. These include materials which contain sulphur or alkalis. . .

You will learn how to look after your mirrors once they have been installed. According to the booklet, clean water and a soft cloth are still the best equipment to keep your mirrors shiny.

It's More Than a Door

By PAULINE GRAVES

If you have been in a motor home or a boat, you know how every inch of space is put to work. Ingeniously contrived are storage space, double purpose furniture and ideas that make for a lot of living in small quarters. So then you look around to see if such ideas can be put to work in your home.

Such an idea, by interior designer, Guy Moore, A.I.D., is shown here. This closet door is more than a door. It also holds shelves, so that when the door is closed, the shelves look like part of the overall wall structure. The door lines up with the wall, of course, but because of its movement, the shelves have structure different from those on the wall. An eight inch deep frame encloses the door, matching the depth of adjacent shelves. And a glass front completes the enclosure, the shelves in a separate, narrow hinged frame that operates independently of the door hinge.

At the top, an 8-inch facia hides a fluorescent light that illuminates the entire recess, the reason for glass shelves. There is a matching thickness across the bottom, partly for design, and partly to conceal the heavy duty casters that roll smoothly on the tile floor. Carpeting would present a problem.

Florists' clay holds the "topple-prone" objects in place, so that they remain secure when the door is opened and closed. Obviously this would have to be a storage closet door, one that has rather infrequent use.

COLA CAFFEINE HAZARD CHECKED

WASHINGTON (WP) — A scientific advisory committee has told the U.S. Food and Drug Administration that it is uncertain about the health hazards to children who drink a lot of cola beverages containing caffeine.

The committee members, part of the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology (FASED), which is reviewing the safety of 360 food additives, were split over the meaning of these uncertainties.

The more cautious members of the panel believe there is a potential health hazard for children who drink large quantities of soft drinks containing caffeine. Many children consume an amount of caffeine that is known to have deleterious effects on the central nervous system of adults. But there are no studies to show what effect the caffeine has on growing children when their brains are still developing and thus much more likely to be affected.

Other panel members said there is no evidence available that demonstrates consuming current levels of caffeine in cola drinks is a hazard to the public, but "uncertainties exist requiring that additional studies be conducted."

In Denmark, the level of caffeine in Coca-Cola has been reduced from the amount used in the United States, 4 parts per million (ppm), to 3 ppm by order of the Danish government.

Decoding the Label First Step to Nutritious Eating

As an old Gilbert and Sullivan song says, "Things are seldom what they seem, skim milk masquerades as cream." There are lot of false faces confronting the consumer in the supermarket today.

Although the government keeps an eye on foods and drugs, they allow at least 300 standard foods such as mayonnaise, ketchup and rye bread to be marketed without an ingredient list. Even when the producer must declare his ingredients it is left to the customer to interpret the label.

This is the third of four excerpts from NutriScore: Rate-Yourself Plan for Better Nutrition, by Ruth Fremes, home economist and consumer broadcaster, and Dr. Zak Sabry, professor of nutrition at the University of Guelph. The book was published this week by Methuen Publications.

Furthermore, much of our food is processed, that is, something has been done to alter its original condition. It is refined, or enriched, or added to, or even manufactured entirely from a chemical formula. To make sense out of this nutritional nonsense, you have to get a firm grip on the terminology, read all labels, and make choices based on sound nutritional guidelines.

Deciphering the labels is the game. The trick is not to be frightened off by chemical terms, but to learn a few key words which tell how the food has been processed, what is left of the original product and what has been added. Some words you'll take for warning signals: If they're on the label the package goes back on the shelf. Other terms will induce you to try a different brand, even if you have to pay a few cents more.

"Processed" simply means treated in some way. It is not necessarily a bad word. Some processes, like canning, are beneficial; some, like deep-frying, go too far. The fact is, however, that any processing is bound to destroy some nutrients.

"Refined": What does it mean? The dictionary says "to purify or separate from extraneous matter." In other words, to take a whole food and separate part of it from the rest. This can be as simple as removing the skin from a beet or as extreme as discarding all of the beet except its sugar. Again, every time foodstuffs are refined, some nutritional value is lost.

Why, then, do we refine foods! For taste, texture, appearance, to combine or preserve them or simply to create a new, competitive product. There are some good reasons for refining. For those who cannot digest whole-grain cereal, it is better to eat a refined cereal than none at all. Unfortunately many refining processes cater to the consumers' love of fat, sweets and novelty flavors.

On occasion foods are "enriched", meaning that vitamins and minerals present before refinement are restored or new nutrients are added to improve the nutritional value of the food. Probably, the most commonly enriched food is white flour. To it, the miller adds thiamin, riboflavin, niacin and iron up to the amount that was previously in the grain, but no more. Refinement of flour removes many more vitamins and minerals that are not resored to white flour.

If we want to deal sensibly with our eating habits, we need to look into some of the commonly eaten foods and try to make sense of these familiar products.

Bread can provide all the nourishment of the whole grain, or it can provide only 40 per cent of what we could be getting — depending on how far it has been refined. There are some breads that have been made from whole-grain kernels. Not even the wheat germ has been removed and the only nutrient lossses have been the ones which inevitably occur in the handling and cooking. This is called whole-grain bread and it is the winner.

A close runner-up is 100 per cent whole wheat. The only thing is, it isn't 100 per cent at all, but 95 per cent. The food and drug regulations allow the miller to lose 5 per cent of the wheat kernel and still call the flour 100 per cent whole wheat. So guess what comes out. Right! The wheat germ comes out.

Cracked wheat bread and white bread rate below the 100 per cent whole wheat bread. Both the bran coat and the germ are removed in making white flour and with them go many of the vitamins and minerals. Most of the fibre, too, is removed along with the bran. This can have unpleasant, and some doctors say serious, effects on digestion and elimination, or lack thereof.

Frozen bread dough is at least as nutritious as fresh bakery bread, and its label must carry a list of the ingredients, so you can look for enriched or whole grain flour, soya oil and whatever else you desire.

Enriched white bread does have some vitamins and minerals restored, but it still lacks the pyridoxine, pantothenate, folate, vitamin E, zinc, copper and manganese present in the whole grain.

Present regulations in Canada make the enrichment of white flour mandatory, but in the United States and many other countries, white flour may be found either enriched or unenriched.

Pasta (spaghetti, noodles, macaroni) is made from refined white flour which may or may not be vitamin enriched. In the wide range of pasta products, some are enriched with the B vitamins, thiamin, riboflavin, niacin and some are not enriched. Enrichment with vitamins is becoming common. Some products have soy flour added to increase their protein level.

Most breakfast cereals are both refined and processed, but some have been man- (or machine-) handled less than others. A few are not refined, like the 100 per cent wholegrain rolled oats and shredded wheat with various brand names. These are labelled as 100 per cent whole grain and contain only the cereal named on the list of ingredients. They are more healthful than cereals made from refined grains.

So the breakfast table nutritional hierarchy would place rolled oats ahead of shredded whole grain cereals which precede flaked cereals which are nevertheless above puffed cereals.

Sugar-coating is nonsense. In tthe first place, it costs more. Compare, for example, the prices of the same brand of Corn Flakes and Sugar Frosted Flakes. The ingredient lists of these two flakes are identical (at least at this writing), but the sugared flake has a lot of sugar. If you want to mix sugar and cereal, it's cheaper to do it at home.

In the second place, the sugared flake forces us to eat more sugar than we normally would.

In the third place, so much sugar is downright unhealthy. It programs the tastebuds for sweetness, so that unsweetened foods become unappealing. It fills us up with empty calories, leaving little room for more valuable foods. It rots the teeth. And for some people it raises the risk of heart disease.

Rice is nice and brown is best. But brown rice is not readily available, due to lack of consumer demand. Consumers demand white rice. White or polished rice is a nutritionally denuded product, with the vitamins and minerals stripped away when the brown coat and germ are removed.

As if this isn't bad enough, manufacturers have developed a product with even greater consumer demand commercially called "instant" or "minute" rice. "Instant" rice is the baked white rice further cooked and dehydrated to avoid 25 minutes cooking time. This removes more nutrients.

A sensible substitute is the white processed rice known as "parboiled" (or as one manufacturer calls it, "converted") rice. Here is one product in which processing can be said to add nutrients.

Brown rice, when parboiled, is steamed under pressure. The pressure pushes many vitamins and minerals from the coat and the germ into the kernel, so that the parboiled rice we subsequently buy has a higher nutritional value than rice kernels naturally possess.

Freshly dug potatoes which are served immediately retain their full share of nutrients. They contain vitamin C (about 236 milligrams per 100 grams), thiamin, niacin and iron. After the potato has been six months in storage, thiamin and niacin are decreased slightly but the vitamin C drops to less than a third (only 8 miligrams per 100 grams).

Frozen french fried potatoes suffer double jeopardy as they have been peeled, diced, fried, frozen and then, depending upon which of the package directions you choose to follow for home serving, can be fried further or baked. the choices of cooking instructions probably affect iron, thiamin and niacin very little and excellent source of vitamin C.

Murmur No Cause To Stop Sports

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Young persons who have heart murmurs or who have had heart surgery don't always have to be excluded from contact sports, says a Yale University cardiologist.

Dr. Norman Talner says some "innocent-type" heart murmurs don't necessarily mean a heart ailment.

A heart murmur is the noise caused by blood flowing across heart valve. He says it can show up in a person who has a normal but slow heart beat.

He cautioned, however, that many of the traditional reasons still apply for prohibiting heart patients from playing contact sports.

A significant lesion in the heart or high blood pressure should rule a youngster out of action, he said.

But docttors now have special instruments to distinguish between different heart ailments and can advise patients what activities they are suited for.

MARK TRAIL

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

I will never be able to prove it, but it is my belief that South would have fulfilled his slam contract in today's deal against 98 per cent of all the players in the world. But our West defender happened to be one of the remaining 2 per cent, as he demonstrated in his defense.

	NORTH
	♠ K J 9 7 5
	♡ A 10 8
	◇ 10 7 4
	♣ A J
WEST		EAST
♠ 8		♠ 6 3
♡ J 9 7 2		♡ Q 5 4
◇ Q J 9 6		◇ 8 3 2
♣ 9 8 6 3		♣ 10 7 5 4 2
	SOUTH
	♠ A Q 10 4 2
	◇ A K 5
	♣ K Q

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
6 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Queen of ◇.

After winning the opening lead with the diamond king, South picked up the outstanding trump in two rounds. He then played the ace and king of clubs, eliminating this suit from the North and South hands. This was followed by the cashing of the ace of diamonds. Next came South's remaining diamond, West winning the trick with his jack.

It is apparent that if West had returned either a diamond or a club, declarer would have fulfilled his contract. He would have ruffed the trick in dummy, while simultaneously discarding the losing heart from his own hand. West was fully aware of this and the fact that he had no choice but to lead a heart. The question was which heart?

If he had led the deuce of hearts, declarer would surely have played dummy's eight-spot, hoping that West possessed the nine. This would be covered by East's queen, with South's king winning the trick. A heart would then be returned, with West's jack being finessed against successfully. Thus the heart loser would be avoided.

If, instead, West chose to lead the nine of hearts, declarer would again avoid the loss of a heart trick. The nine would be covered by dummy's ten, East's queen and South's king. South would not play another heart and, with West playing low, dummy's eight would be inserted.

But West made neither of these plays. Instead, he plunked down the jack of hearts! If declarer won the trick with his king, in time East's queen would become a winner. And, if he elected to capture the jack with the board's ace, when he next led the ten of hearts East would put up the queen, and South's king would take the trick. West's nine of hearts would not be the highest-ranking heart left in the deck.

Forget Aroma, Think of Soil

A newcomer from Ontario has written me a most interesting letter describing the wonderful aroma of burning leaves.

After listing the pleasures of childhood, dashing through a deep drift to hear the sounds as they scatter, and likening it to the sounds of surf on a beach, he states that burning leaves is an eastern Canadian custom.

He ably pictures the smoke of burning maple leaves rising from every back yard, calling it a ritual celebrating the end of the growing season, the sweet aroma of the fire smoke remaining with you through the long months of snow and ice.

Why, he asks, do you state in your gardening column that burning leaves is a waste of valuable material, dollars going up in smoke?

Isn't there an esthetic value which is greater than the value of the leaves? Isn't fall a time to be enjoyed with the senses of both vision and smell? And what sweeter smell than burning leaves?

For me, he continues, the most pleasant of childhood memories are held in falling leaves, and I feel that every child should experience and remember the autumns of youth and the aroma of burning leaves. End of quotes from letter.

Thanks for a most beautiful description of fall in Ontario. I think that most of us enjoyed the fall bonfires during youth, whether in eastern Canada, western Canada, England or Europe, and most of us retain some pleasant memories of those days, even to a point of indulging in a fall burn-up despite our advancing years. But there are distinct differences between the eastern and western sections of Canada.

Those living in eastern Canada have a legacy of good soil made by the leaves that have fallen from native deciduous trees for centuries. Each year these fallen leaves had been buried in snow, which is rich in nitrogen, making a natural compost heap, and their valuable nutrients and their humus content has made the good soil.

In contrast, those of us living in western Canada have no legacy of soil. Our terrain has been aptly described as rocks and Christmas trees. The West Coast was a rain forest of coniferous trees which shed one-tenth or less of their foliage each year. During the same period the deciduous trees of the east were making a good soil for future gardeners, the conifers of the west made only about four inches of mossy top soil.

We were not blessed with a ready made soil waiting to be planted. To make a garden here has meant making the soil first, and any leaves that could be obtained for this purpose were a valuable acquisition.

Our native deciduous trees, such as the Garry oak and leaves much smaller than the some species of poplars, have leaves much smaller than the eastern maples, and it takes many oaks to give the same bulk of humus as one eastern maple. Therefore each leaf has a greater value to the gardener.

While I agree with my correspondent regarding the enjoyable aroma of burning maple leaves, it surprises me he did not mention the smell of burning oak leaves as not comparable in any way.

To me, burning wet oak leaves do not produce an aroma to foster beautiful memories of fall. They bring memories of an acrid, musty smelling smoke that could sting the nostrils and cause the eyes to weep and remain reddened for days.

Because of these unpleasant effects, we of the West find no esthetic value in burning fallen leaves, but we do recognize their high value in making the soil we so desperately need.

That is possibly why we concentrate on gathering and composting instead of finding pleasure in burning.

School Board Sticks with Joint Bargaining

Trustee Hal Knight failed in a last-minute attempt Monday night to pull the Greater Victoria School District out of a joint bargaining agency for municipal employers.

Trustees voted 6 to 3 to remain one of the six civic employers who make up the Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association.

The GVLRA was set up to bargain with locals of the Canadian Union of Public Employees.

Knight said the board is "copping out" by passing its labor-management relations on to another agency.

But other trustees disagreed: "The GVRLA is a small group compared to the great, nation-wide militant power of CUPE," said Trustee Peter Bunn.

Bunn said it is a fact of life that the big union has the "big stick."

Last year the municipalities of Oak Bay, Saanich and Esquimalt joined with the city of Victoria, the Capital Region district and the school district to form the GVRLA.

The agency applied in September to the Labor Relations Board for accreditation as a single bargaining agency and it was granted last week.

During the two-day hearing in September, the school board's membership was challenged by the two CUPE locals that work for the district.

He said Monday that schools will be the first to be struck because that is where the most pressure can be brought to bear.

He suggested such shutdowns could be avoided if the school district bargained separately with its own CUPE locals.

Knight's presentation to the board was in a similar vein. He said "arms length" dealings with employees have not proven a satisfactory way of dealing with them.

"Membership in the GVRLA appears to be an irritant to the unions and could hinder good employee relations," he said.

Other disadvantages cited in Knight's presentation included:

—The district could save an $18,000 annual contribution to the GVRLA because of the federal anti-inflation guidelines control over contract settlements.

—the board may get locked into an organization that may be difficult to get out of.

—objectives and operations of the municipalities are not the same as the school board and frequently interests may conflict, or school board needs overlooked.

—members in the GVRLA probably contravenes the intent if the Public Schools Act that gives local responsibility to school boards.

Trustee Lavinia Greenwood and Roy Temple supported Knight.

Mrs. Greenwood said the unions are strongly opposed to the membership and the board "can't go on assuming the unions' opinions are worth nothing."

Dr. Mark Fisher pointed out the district had joined the South Vancouver Island bargain unit for joint negotiations with teachers' associations, and teachers make up a larger group.

Chairman Bill Ross said other systems hadn't worked in the past.

"Let's give this one a try," he said.

Shipyards Still Talking

Talks are continuing between the Joint Shipyards Conference and Burrard and Yarrows shipyards in hopes of averting threatened strike action.

Bill Hudson, president of Burrard Dry Dock Ltd. in Vancouver, said today both sides met briefly Monday and are scheduled to meet again Wednesday.

The 813 workers at Burrard and Yarrows in Victoria have voted 60 per cent in favor of strike action to back up contract demands. At the time of the strike vote last week there were 208 employees at Yarrows and 605 at Burrard.

The union says the companies' final offer, retroactive to Aug. 15, was for a $1-an-hour increase over 25 months for a journeyman on a base rate of $8.33 an hour.

The unions say that does not even come up to the guidelines allowed under the federal Anti-Inflation Board.

Weed Puller Hired by Parks

The Capital region's parks committee decided Monday to hire a weed-pulling rig developed by a local inventor to clear 10 acres of water in Elk-Beaver Lake Park.

The barge-mounted machine uses a water jet to blast weeds loose from the lake bottom together with a suction head and discharge pipe to pump them ashore. It was developed by Frank Hillis and demonstrated for the committee on Langford Lake last month.

Engineering staff were authorized to hire the weed-eating device at a cost not to exceed $3,000 an acre. Areas to be cleared would be around the three main beaches, one at the south end of Beaver Lake and two on Elk Lake.

A staff report will also be prepared on the feasibility of using Chinese Carp, a weed-eating fish, on an experimental basis.

On acquisition of parkland, the committee reaffirmed its policy of devoting available funds to maintenance and development of parks except where certain critical parcels became available for purchase.

There is one-half mill, about $350,000, set aside in regional spending for parks and with government grants the parks budget is about $450,000.

Executive director Dennis Young told the committee that if land purchases are not curtailed, the region's ability to manage its existing parks will be seriously impaired.

4-H Head Elected

Assistant leaders of Saanich Peninsula 4-H Beef Club met Monday to discuss a 1977 program and reaffirmed Mrs. Dolly O'Reilly, 483 Goward, as leader.

LIGHTBULB SALE PROCEEDS STOLEN

NANAIMO — A total of $500 in cash, representing the proceeds of the club's annual sale of lightbulbs, was stolen from the Nanaimo Boys and Girls Club over the weekend.

The money was to have been used to purchase material for handicrafts and other activities, a club spokesman said.

At the same time, police reported two bullets were fired Saturday night through the dining room windows of the Malaspina Hotel in downtown Nanaimo.

Police want to talk to anyone with information about persons hunting on Protection Island, or anyone on the water in Nanaimo harbor at that time.

Vietnam Plans UN Pressure

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Vietnam began campaigning today to bring General Assembly pressure on the United States to reverse the Security Council veto it cast against Vietnamese membership in the United Nations.

U.S. Ambassador William Scranton told the council the failure of the Hanoi government to account satisfactorily for 800 U.S. servicemen missing in action in the Vietnam war raised doubts about Vietnam's humanitarianism and consequently about its fitness to join the UN.

The council voted 14 to 1 on Monday in favor of recommending that the General Assembly admit Vietnam to membership, but the dissenting vote from one of the five permanent members — the United States — killed the recommendation.

Vietnamese observer Dinh Ba Thi accused President Ford and U.S. State Secretary Henry Kissinger of a desire for vengeance against Vietnam.

Thi hinted that information about the missing men might be supplied if the United States would let Vietnam into the world organization. He said the U.S. veto policy "will only serve to continue the days of waiting of American families. . . ."

Later, he told a reporter that General Assemgly action on his government's behalf would be discussed today by a committee of representatives from Algeria, Cuba, Guyana, Sri Lanka, Vietnam and Angola. The United States vetoed Angola's membership application on June 23.

80 m.p.h. Chase Driver Guilty

A 24-year-old Victoria Man was found guilty Monday in county court of criminal negligence in driving his car on Victoria and Saanich streets Feb. 29.

Leslie John Mobey, 101 Island Highway, will be sentenced by Judge E. J. C. Stewart Tuesday, Dec. 14 at 10 a.m.

Mobey has been free on his own recognizance and will remain so pending sentencing.

Court was told Mobey reached speeds of 70 and 80 miles an hour during a chase by a Victoria police squad car. He ran a number of red lights and stop signs, forcing pedestrians to jump to safety and vehicles to take evasive action.

Half a dozen shots were fired by the pursuing police car before Mobey was forced to stop on Shelbourne Street just south of McKenzie Avenue after a five-minute chase from Douglas Street in the Princess-Bay area.

Judge Stewart said he had "no doubt whatsoever" that Mobey's driving came within the definition of criminal negligence.

"The accused did things and omitted to do other things that was his duty to do so, and in so doing showed a wanton disregard for the safety of other persons," he said.

"A fair number of people in Victoria and Saanich on that Sunday night were very close to being involved in a terrible accident."

Only by the grace of God, he said, was no one hurt.

Harold Townsend, a Victoria police constable at the time and driver of the squad car, said Mobey's car came up close behind him on Douglas and he pulled over. When Mobey overtook him, he took up the chase with emergency lights flashing and later the siren.

The cars turned on to Bay Street, then Blanshard to Fort, reaching 70 miles an hour. On Richmond, just past Bay, he an Constable Chris Smith warned Mobey over the public address system to stop. This had no effect and Mobey was warned police would have to shoot.

Constable Smith said Mobey hit "well over 80 miles an hour" on Fort Street. He fired one warning shot in the Newton Gardens area, then two shots at the rear wheels, one more near Mount Tolmie and three shots on Shelbourne.

The police car knocked Mobey's car out of control and he stopped on Shelbourne, after a chase along Palo Alto and Mortimer.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

Peter G. McClean, 25, had originally pleaded not guilty but changed his plea to guilty.

He got the coat from a girl who told him it was her husband's and she was selling it because she needed money. The accused admitted he suspected the coat was stolen.

McLean, who has a record dating back to 1970, escaped earlier this year from Wilkinson Road jail but returned voluntarily. He had on several occasions requested professional help because of a drug problem. He married about five months ago.

A 19-year-old Vancouver man was released on his own recognizance and his older brother and another man, both of Vancouver, remanded in custody on charges of breaking and entering and theft.

Timothy Trott was released, but Jerald Trott, 25, and Harder, 28, were remanded in custody until Nov. 22 for plea.

Raymond J. Snow, 42, of no fixed address, was sentenced to 30 days in prison after pleading guilty to stealing three packs of playing cards, a carton of cigarettes and a box of chocolates from Douglas Drugs Ltd. on Nov. 7.

Common Market Snubs Red Block

BRUSSELS (UPI) — In a double slight to the Soviet Union, the European Common Market snubbed the Kremlin-dominated Comecon trade bloc and took the first steps in a strategy designed to help Yugoslavia stay out of Moscow's grip.

Foreign ministers of the nine Common Market countries Monday gave their long-awaited reply to an offer by Comecon last February to talk business. The answer inevitably will cause deep displeasure in Moscow.

In effect, it said the Common Market does not recognize Comecon as an equal partner to negotiate on trade matters because of its domination by Moscow, but added it is willing to negotiate trade deals with individual Communist countries.

The community affirmed the policy of bypassing Comecon last week by concluding an unprecedented textile agreement with Comecon member Romania.

While Leonid Brezhnev, general secretary of the Soviet Communist Party, was in Belgrade on an official visit, the ministers decided to send their own representative to Yugoslavia with an offer of stepped-up western European support.

Board Hires Secretary

DUNCAN — The Cowichan Valley Region Board Monday ratified a decision of its executive committee to hire Robert Hallsor of Terrace as administrative secretary.

Two directors on the 14-member board, Mayor Ken Paskin of Duncan and Dick Stephenson of Shawnigan Lake, voted against the move, claiming there was no need to create a separate position of secretary.

Lake Cowichan director Ken Irving said the need for an additional administrator has been recognized for years.

"There is no way we can expect our executive staff to continue working seven nights a week attending committee meetings," Irving said.

Lang Used Gov't Jet For Party Flight

OTTAWA (CP) — Government records show that Transport Minister Otto Lang took a group of aides, reporters and public relations people on a government airplane from Saskatoon to Regina in April, 1975, to attend a party given by his brother-in-law, Saskatchewan Liberal Tony Merchant.

New Democrat Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville), referring to the trip, asked Monday in the Commons whether the government planned to tighten rules governing the use by cabinet ministers of publicly-owned executive aircraft.

Prime Minister Trudeau reiterated that the planes are only to be used "when the public duty of a minister is involved." Those rules had been followed for the last 20 years.

Government travel records show that the cost of the April, 1975, trip — from Ottawa to Saskatoon to Regina and back to the capital — was $10,222. Lang took several National Press Club members — including some in the club's band — to Saskatoon for a press party.

The group then made a trip to Regina to attend Merchant's party.

Meanwhile in Saskatoon, Anthony Abbott, consumer and corporate affairs minister, said it was unfair to blame Lang for spending money which would still be spent even if the government plane stayed on the ground.

Bennett Hasn't Opinion

Times News Services

Premier Bill Bennett said today he has no opinion to offer on the Quebec election until he studies the results.

Bennett said he will go to a provincial premiers' conference in December and at that time, he and his colleagues will get a chance to discuss Quebec's position and the future of Canada.

The premier said he wants to hear Rene Levesque's position from the new premier himself.

"To many 'experts' have been putting too many interpretations on too many things," Bennett said.

Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm said if Quebec separates, it will help B.C.'s welfare problems.

Vander Zalm has complained in the past that Quebec was sending its unemployed to B.C. to collect welfare.

"If in fact they do separate, they'll have to get a passport to travel here which will certainly make things tougher and probably cut down on some of the things we've been concerned about," the minister said.

"Separation could help by cutting down on some of the problems we faced in the past."

NDP leader Dave Barrett today sent a telegram to Levesque saying that all people in Canada can be friends and remain as a nation even with differences of opinion.

"What you hope for the people of Quebec is what we all hope for the people of Canada," Barrett said in the tele-

When historians get around to analyzing the Parti Quebecois win, they might well decide it was a day when Canadian confederation was strengthened rather than weakened, Progressive Conservative leader Scott Wallace said.

"That is the gut feeling I have about Rene Levesque. Maybe I'm dreaming. I hope not," he said.

He believes the 54-year-old separatist leader is a highly intelligent man who is much more moderate than he appears to be, Wallace added.

"He tells things accurately and honestly, which is something we haven't received from other Quebec leaders," he said.

Most other provincial premiers shared an observation by Ontario Premier William Davis that Monday's election "does not constitute a defeat for Canada."

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau said today that he will not negotiate any form of separation with Quebec or any other province from the rest of Canada.

"We have only one mandate," he told a hushed Commons following the election Monday of a majority Parti Quebecois government in Quebec.

"That is to govern the whole country."

The current Liberal government "has no mandate to negotiate any form of separation with any province.

Trudeau was replying to Opposition Leader Joe Clark, who opened the Commons proceedings by asking what the prime minister planned to do to pacify investors worried about the election of the separatist Parti Quebecois.

The prime minister replied that his government "is committed to an unseparated Canada . . . a Canada that is undivided."

On Monday night Premier-elect Rene Levesque told thousands of cheering supporters in an emotional speech "we hope in friendship with our fellow citizens of Canada to give ourselves a country which is Quebec."

His supporters responded with cries of "Quebec for the Quebecers" and some of them broke into a love song by Gilles Vigneault.

In his victory speech, Levesque said his "clear majority" enables the PQ to hold a referndum on whether the province should separate from Canada and become a republic.

"We'll work as hard as we can to make Quebec a country for all Quebecers who live in it and love it," he added.

At least half of the 22 Liberal cabinet ministers who entered Monday's election, including Premier Robert Bourassa, lost their seats, paving the way for a leadership convention within the next few months.

	1976	1973
Parti Quebecois	66	6
Liberal	27	102
Union Nationale	11	—
Creditiste	1	2
Popular National Party	1	—

The Pequistes captured about 41 per cent of the popular vote while the Liberals won about 34 per cent.

Blacks Reject Timetable

Times News Services

GENEVA — Black nationalist leaders Robert Mugabe and Joshu Nkomo today rejected a British compromise timetable for black majority rule in Rhodesia, forcing early adjournment of the Geneva peace talks.

Mugabe and Nkomo, partners in a "patriotic front," also said Britain's failure to set a binding date for independence meant it had "no intention to transfer power to the true representatives of the people."

Ivor Richard, the British conference chairman, adjourned the talks after the "patriotic front" statement was presented and did not set a time for another meeting.

Rhodesian foreign minister Pieter van der Byl, leaving the meeting, said Mugabe and Nkomo had made "all sorts of unreasonable and unfounded allegations against the chairman."

British officials said also they had "no idea at all" what would now happen.

Mozambique said today airborne Rhodesian forces attacking across the border have lost seven planes but captured a Mozabican army base in a battle that has lasted at least four days.

In Salisbury, a communique today from security forces headquarters reported Rhodesian troops have killed 29 guerrillas in the past 24 hours, but made no mention of action across the border.

Dollar Dips In Win Wake

Times News Services

The Canadian dollar dropped sharply and then rallied in early foreign exchange dealings in New York today in what traders privately interpreted as a reaction to the Parti Quebecois victory in the Quebec election.

The dollar dropped slightly more than a half-cent in early trading to $1.0175 U.S. from Monday's closing quotation of $1.0230, but rallied within the first hour to $1.0210, just slightly below the Monday close.

A Bank of Canada spokesman in Ottawa said the fluctuation was "not a huge move at all."

A Royal Bank of Canada spokesman said the shifting value of the dollar was "quite normal after an election," adding that it would take a few days to determine the effect of the PQ win on the exchange rate.

Most of Canada's business leaders also reacted with a nervous calm today to the PQ sweep.

The reaction ranged from that of T. J. Bell, chairman of Abitibi Paper Co. Ltd., who said any threat of Quebec separation amounts to "economic chaos," to that of Allen Lambert, chairman of the Toronto Dominion Bank, who announced it will be business-as-usual despite the emergence of the independence-minded Pequistes headed by Rene Levesque.

However, whisky multi-millionaire Charles Bronfman, who threatened Monday to take his baseball and business interests and leave Quebec if the separatist party won the election, was suffering morning-after effects today.

No Way To Block Oil Hike

VIENNA (UPI) — U.S. efforts to avert an increase in the world oil price have little chance of success, according to sources close to the world's major oil producers.

The sources said economic experts of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries will recommend an oil price increase to OPEC's ministerial meeting Dec. 15 at Qatar.

OPEC's economic commission convened Monday for a one-week conference to prepare a report for the oil ministers.

"They can only make recommendations," an OPEC source said. "The decisions will be taken by the ministers."

There was little doubt among oil experts that the economic commission of the 13-member organization will recommend an increase in the oil, price that has remained frozen in the last two ministerial meetings.

"The price of oil must be maintained by linking it to the price of manufactured goods," one source said.

Japan Scraps Plans For B.C. Steel Mill

Plans for a joint B.C.-Japanese steel mill for the province have been scrapped, Economic Development Minister Don Phillips announced Monday

Phillips told a news conference in Tokyo the decision resulted from talk with NKK, a leading Japanese steel maker. Company officials expressed concern over the production cost increases and a decline in world-wide demand for steel products

Studies on the steel mill were started early in 1974, and possible sites had been narrowed down to Prince George and Kitimat

The mill would have had an annual production capacity of four million tons of crude steel

Japanese steel industry officials said the proposed capacity was much larger than necessary and that production costs, considering and mill's location, could have been 20 per cent higher than elsewhere

The cancellation follows a similar decision earlier this year in which Japanese steelmakers withdrew from participation in development of a mill in Brazil

Phillips and the B.C. delegation have spent about nine days in Japan and return later today

Phillips' visit to Japan also included talks with government and industry officials on increased coal exports from B.C.

The minister said Monday, in a telephone interview from Tokyo, he could make no firm announcement on coal sales until he discusses the issue with the B.C. cabinet and the federal government

He said he has "no reason to believe" that coal sales to Japan would be less than 15 million tons per year over the next few years

B.C. currently sells about nine million tons per year to Japan.

Teacher Talks Break Off

The 1977 contract will now have to be settled by an arbitration board.

The two groups could not agree on a salary settlement. The board offered an eight per cent increase. Teachers were asking for 11.5 per cent.

The school district has already appointed local laywer Noel Paget as its representative on the three-member arbitration board.

A binding arbitration settlement will have to be made before Dec. 31.

She said negotiations had been going along fairly well when "suddenly there was this bolt from the blue" — the request for 11.5 per cent.

Bitter Fighting Bares B.C. Labor Policy Split

Times News Services

VANCOUVER — Bitter floor fighting erupted Monday at the opening session of the B.C. Federation of Labor's annual convention here as delegates challenged an executive call for continued militancy.

A roll-call vote today on future policy was expected to accentuate the growing rift.

The challengers, including the International Woodworkers of America, the B.C. Government Employees' Union and the United Steelworkers of America, lost a standing vote on the issue Monday, 437-352, but managed to force today's roll-call vote on policy direction.

The challengers took issue with the conclusion of a policy report Monday which said in part:

"We must continue the pattern followed in recent years by this federation of endeavoring, through militant industrial action and an improved program of political action, to fight for working people . . ."

Jack Munro, IWA western regional president and a leader of the challenging faction, said "the image of the trade union movement is in the gutter right now" under present leadership.

"We have got to correct that image," he added. "We want to take our rightful place in society. We want to speak with some god-damned appearance of being responsible people."

Munro toll the 847 delegates at the meeting that seven of the 16-member executive council had voted against the report and wanted their opposition listed.

More More

The seven are Munro; John Fryer, general secretary of the BCGEU; Mike Kramer and Len Stair of the Canadian Union of Public Employees; Jack Hill, of the steelworkers and Earl Foxcroft and Erich Ewert of the IWA

Munro's remarks came after Len Guy, secretary-treasurer of the federation, said: "It is vitally important that this convention give a clear mandate to the officers as to the way attacks (by the federal and provincial governments) are to be fought whether to continue to place our primary reliance on united industrial action, supplemented by an effective political action program, or whether to turn to some sort of attempt to find favor with those governments."

Observers see today's roll-call policy vote as an indicator of Friday's balloting for treasurer's post. Guy, the incumbent, is being challenged by Art Kube, regional political education director for the Canadian Labor Congress who favors a more sophisticated approach to federation policy.

Owners Could Get 3 Years Tax Rebate To Repair, Maintain Houses

Heritage Home Upgrading Fund

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

A proposal to offer home repair and maintenance grants to owners of designated heritage homes, equivalent to their annual gross property taxes, was presented today to Victoria city council.

If the policy is adopted, and if most of the 78 designated bylaws now before council are given final approval, it is estimated that the program's cost to the city next year will be between $50,000 and $55,000.

But Victoria has a gut feeling that it won't have to bear this cost burden alone for more than a few months.

Apparently pinning a lot of faith on the well-known heritage sympathies of newly-appointed Recreation and Conservation Minister Sam Bawlf, city council hopes that the provincial government will step in and share the cost of the financial incentives in a program that will eventually embrace all B.C. municipalities.

Although the proposal was scheduled for consideration at this afternoon's council caucus meeting, it was already being discussed enthusiastically Monday during a council tour of 13 properties which are included in the list of 78 buildings proposed for designation.

To date the only form of financial assistance contemplated by the city for heritage home owners has been a 15 per cent no-string-attached exemption from property taxes in 1977.

But under the latest plan, that bylaw would be scrapped and the city would establish a Heritage Improvement Fund administered by a non-profit society or some other form of association.

Into the fund from the city's general revenues would be pumped a cash sum equal to the annual gross property taxes (excluding any local improvement tax) of all eligible, designated properties.

The owners of designated heritage buildings that are "used exclusively for residential purposes" would then be able to apply to the fund administrators (probably consisting of three council members, two city officials and one member of the Heritage Advisory Committee) for grants to "restore, improve and maintain" their homes.

They would be able to apply for maximum grants equal to three years' gross property taxes, depending on the nature of the repairs needed. Full property taxes would continue to be paid in the usual way.

In its present form, the proposed incentives program would limit such grants to the improvement and upkeep of building exteriors, although they would also be available for upgrading "structural integrity" (foundation, for example) and such things as fencing and private sidewalks.

After submission of the application form a city building inspector would visit the property to verify that the work was, in fact, required.

The applicant would have to obtain at least two estimates and after the work was completed a second inspection would be carried out before the grant was issued.

As aldermen visited heritage homes in the Rockland, Fairfield and Victoria West areas Monday, talking to some of the owners, there was clear evidence to support the claims that many of the homes in question are sadly in need of repair and improvement.

Apart from an obviously needed coat of paint on the exterior, the building looked in sound condition. But the owner, carpenter Kurt Schmidt, told council members most of the house has no proper foundations.

Like many of its era, it's built on post-and-rock. Schmidt wants to get around to tackling the job, but said the cost is against him.

When Ald. Bob Wright asked him how he would feel about a special fund to provide assistance in such cases, Schmidt indicated the help would be welcome.

But Mayor Mike Young later admitted that the heritage fund as now proposed stands more to benefit "heavily tax-loaded" properties than homes like Schmidt's, where gross taxes are only about $360 a year.

He and Ald. John Hayes, who is one of the two council representatives on the Heritage Advisory Committee, said further refinements might be needed to the basic formula so that financial help might be more fairly distributed.

"We are going to have to come up with a mixed bag of goodies in the way of incentives and encouragement," said Hayes.

One of the first stops on the four-hour heritage tour was 1171 Rockland, a residence-turned-boarding-house which the report termed "a major landmark structure in its own right . . . a very fine example of the Edwardian Queen Anne style"

Owner Lawrence Jones has organized a petition among owners of the 78 homes proposed for designation, and says he has obtained 50 signatures.

"Yet you are still going through with this," he protested Monday.

The mayor told Jones there was no basis for the fears that designation might result in financial hardship.

Quite the reverse applied, he said. "If you don't have this house on the designated list you might lose money. If we designated it you would probably have enough money returned to do a lot of your outside repairs."

Young added: "There is no way this house is worth anything but the way it is." If new development replaced it, the site restrictions would not yield anything like such a high financial return.

TOWN TALK

If the price of chicken feed goes up, the farmer has to get more for his eggs. We all agree with that.

But the one-cent a dozen increase the farmer receives turns into a two-cent increase on the store shelves.

But if there is a legitimate reason for the short-shrift to the consumer, how come it doesn't work the other way around?

The Egg Marketing Board said Monday chicken farmers would receive two cents a dozen less for their eggs because the price of chicken feed went down.

Driver Badly Injured

Saanich police took him to hospital with head and chest injuries and internal bleeding.

Police said it appeared Dobbyn had been driving south and the car missed a curve, going off the pavement and striking a tree on the east side.

Bed Shortage Forces RJH Surgery Delay

Dr. A. C. Pickles, executive director, said the hospital continues to be jammed with patients and those not requiring surgery have spilled over into beds usually occupied by those who do.

That means that while there is time available in operating rooms there is no place to put patients before and after.

Emergency and urgent surgery is being done, said Pickles. But it's the lucky patient who gets into hospital on schedule for elective surgery.

At one point last week the hospital had 42 more patients than it is supposed to hold when full, he said.

There are a total of 960 beds in the Jubilee complex, about 700 of them for acute care patients. Sixty of these 700 are now occupied by patients not needing that level of care but with nowhere else to go to get the lesser care they do require.

Pickles said the hospital suffered the same sort of space crisis last November and he has no explanation for why it is happening.

Jubilee encountered problems of another sort as well Monday, having to put out an urgent call for blood when supplies dwindled.

Jerry Savabe, spokesman for the Red Cross, said today a clinic scheduled Monday had only produced three of the 15 units of A positive and A negative by about 6 p.m. so he broadcast a radio appeal.

That brought a crwod of donors to Red Cross House, pushing the day's total to 174, well past the target of 160. In all, 29 pints were hurried to Jubilee. Another clinic, at 1046 Fort, continues to 8 tonight.

Aldermen Rap Bawlf Brief

In his controversial housing report for the provincial government, Recreation and Conservation Minister Sam Bawlf is "using a sledge-hammer to drive home a tack," Victoria Ald. Bob Wright said today.

Wright told a city housing committee meeting that Bawlf seems to favor scrapping the present land-use contract system in guiding new development because some municipalities have abused the system in the past by charging developers high impost fees for off-site service costs.

But in taking this stand the minister is overlooking the fact that generally land-use contracts have proved an effective planning tool, he said.

Claiming that Victoria is "blameless" on all the points raised by Bawlf in his criticisms of municipalities, Ald. Murray Glazier said the city traditionally uses land-use contracts to "get the project to conform to our ideas on how it should be."

He said the system tends to favor the developer rather than the city, however, because it provides a means of bypassing physical site constraints and regular zoning rules.

But Mayor Mike Young argued there is some validity to the claim that this procedure allows for public exposure of the development proposal at too late a stage.

By the time a public hearing is held the scheme has already wound its way through surveys, architectural drawings, submissions to planning department and advisory commissions, he noted.

"It is frustrating to the public and it is frustrating to the developer (if the latter has his plans turned down after months of preparation)" Young said.

City planning director Geoff Greenhalgh was instructed to prepare a critique on Bawlf's report.

Gap on Yates Eyed Next For Spruce-Up

The 600-block Yates Street, now a plain filling in the otherwise fancy "sandwich" of the 500 and 700 blocks, may also be prettied-up by the city of Victoria — if businesses on the block are prepared to help foot the bill.

A proposed $246,000 uplift was discussed today by the city's roads and traffic committee.

City engineer John Sansom said the scheme envisages some widening, realignment of curbs, sidewalk renewal, extra lighting and the installation of planters and trees.

Sansom said it is also proposed to erect a "nice design" bus shelter in the north side of the street, but in that case businesses there may be asked to remove their "rather untidy collection of canopies."

The merchants will be asked to pay $153,000 of the $246,000 through a long-term local improvement levy on their taxes.

City manager Jim Bramley recommended that the city's $93,000 share be found from the tax sale land account. Officials were instructed to sound out business opinion on the proposal.

Credit Cards Trip Waitresses, Tip Off the Taxman

By AL FORREST

The credit card age is making it difficult for waitresses who cheat on their income tax.

Customers charing a meal may also charge the tip, providing a written record for the tax man.

"This gives us a basis to calculate the amount of tips received by each waitress during the year," says Stan Jenkins, Revenue Canada's chief of audit for the Victoria region.

Now, however, if a Victoria waitress has served $20,000 worth of meals on credit cards in 1975 and received $5,000 worth of tips, there is reason to believe she may have received a total of $10,000 worth of tips during the year if a check shows she served another $20,000 worth of meals on a cash basis.

Not that she will be automatically assessed the extra $10,000.

"The figure is just a starting point. We sit down with the person concerned and discuss the various factors," Jenkins said.

Pat Kelly, who directs field operations of the team of investigators, said many factors are taken into consideration when assessing the amount of tips likely received during the year.

In the example given, the person may have received less or more than the $10,000. For example, while people may tend to leave larger tips when they charge than when they pay cash, others may have charged the meal and left a tip in cash.

After a lengthy discussion between the waitress and a Revenue Canada official, the appropriate total is decided and added to the tax bill. If the waitress refuses to discuss the matter, Revenue Canada said. "But we will do a thorcan assess the appropriate amount without discussion.

If the taxes have been clearly evaded, the waitress could be faced with a 25 per cent penalty plus a fine in addition to the back taxes owing.

This type of thorough check will be made at all major restaurants in the Victoria area this year. Some of the smaller food outlets also will be checked.

"We can't do them all, it wouldn't be possible," Jenkins said.

Any other employee who receives tips will be checked in a similar way, he said.

Tax cheaters can avoid the 25 per cent penalty and fine by making a voluntary disclosure that they have evaded taxes, Jenkins said.

Anyone making a voluntary disclosure is still liable for the taxes owing plus interest but will not be fined, provided the disclosure is thorough and voluntary.

If a waitress learns she is under investigation and decides to make a disclosure, this is not considered voluntary. She must make it before the investigation begins.

In addition, if only some tips are reported, the waitress could be fined if further investigation shows there were other tips received which were deliberately concealed from the tax office.

Kelly said that, with all major food outlets being monitored, it would be difficult for a waitresss to conceal tips for an extended period.

"If they are not caught this year, they may be caught next year and they are almost certain to be caught a tsome time. Then their whole file can be investigated to check previous years."

Jenkins said the number of voluntary disclosures has been "disappointingly small," just a couple a year and usually the result of a news story of someone in a similar situation being charged by Revenue Canada.

"We would like to see far more people making valuntary disclosures but the majority of people seem to prefer to gamble they won't get caught. It may turn out to be a poor gamble."

Pruning Time for Apple Trees

Whether you want to restore vigor to that aging apple tree in the backyard, ensure the success of a recently planted sapling, or increase the yield of a whole orchard . . . you'd do well—especially now, while the sap's down and the leafless branches are easy to see—to explore the advantages you can derive from a little judicious tree pruning.

Few things are as beneficial to a fruit tree as regular pruning. A properly trimmed tree is not only more pleasing to the eye than its untrained counterpart, but can yield more and better fruit AND live a healthier life . . . all of which adds up to money in your pocket.

And speaking of money, tree pruning is a marketable skill that can pay your bills if you live anywhere near commercial orchards.

The main tools you'll need to do a good pruning job are: a small pruning saw, a saw mounted on pole (for reaching those high, thick branches), hand loppers (lopping shears), and pole loppers (for topping and high work). You'll fine these items at most large nursery and garden supply outlets.

In case you've ever wondered, a pruning saw differs from a carpenter's saw in two ways: (1) the pruning saw has coarser, thicker teeth that are less likely to bind up than an ordinary saw's, and (2) it's made to cut—usually—on the pull stroke. Each of these features can be a definite advantage when you're working atop a ladder or a branch and you can't afford to lose your balance.

Prune at any time of year, although a great deal of cutting in early spring may cause excessive loss of sap. The owners of commercial apple orchards usually do their trimming in the winter, when they have time for the job and when tree outlines are most distinct.

Pruning is not performed when the temperature falls below 20 defrees F, as such frigid conditions can cause dieback in trimmed limbs.)

If you intend to work with long-neglected trees, you can spot dead limbs and branches more easily when the tree is still bearing leaves . . . in the summer.

Summer's also the time to check unwanted sucker growth. These unproductive shoots usually arise from old cuts, limb junctions (crotches), or spots near the tree's base. Although they're easily pulled out the first time they appear, such shoots—once established—must be nipped with loppers or sawed off.

(Hint: When you cut away a sucker, leave as little stub behind as possible . . . as with any pruning cut. This'll not only prevent recurrent sucker growth but promote proper healing of the wound.)

Begin by removing dead wood, which only invites insect and fungal growth (and ultimately-heart rot), from your tree or trees. You can probably should—dress large cuts with a special paint made for the purpose (see your garden shop), or with ordinary, non-leaded, oil-base exterior paint.

Once you've trimmed away all dead tissue, look for crossing limbs. (On older trees, you may have to sort out whole whorls of tangled branches.) Such a "mare's nest" is undesirable, since the limbs—if they rub—can scrape each other's bark and damage fruit and because the growth of too many branches in one place tends to tie up the tree's energy (thereby limiting the amount and size of its fruit). The remedy is to remove one or the other of any crossing limbs.

If the tree's getting too tall or too wide, don't hesitate to cut it back. The usual practice when training young trees is to nip the tips of most branches back one-third to one-half the previous year's growth. (You can determine yearly growth—after the first years of pruning—by closely observing the segments on the branches.)

Cutting trees back not only promotes the development of heavier branches but controls any spreading or reaching tendency. (If you cut back into older wood, however, you may severly limit—or altogether stop—new growth.)

It's generally a good idea—when you remove excess branches from a major limb or large branch—to leave intact those shoots that come off the sides (although even these quite often need to be thinned).

Under branches—arising from the bottom of a limb or branch—are usually weak and should be removed . . . as should branches that grow out of the tops of others (the exception being when the growth in question is at the end of a branch).

Upward-growing branches often get out of hand and drain too much energy from a main limb. Such growths—called water sprouts—can ruin the form of a tree by reaching up into higher branches, where they cause rubbing, entaglement and general chaos. Hence, they should be nipped.

Finally, remove any branches that grow back toward the center of a tree, as these wayward growths tend to limit the light so necessary to the proper ripening of fruit.

Most tree training is now of the "central leader" type. This method has been described as "trying to make an apple tree look like a Christmas tree" . . . and—except for the fact that the ornaments arrive a little early—it's an apt description.

The central leader is nothing more than the main branch that grows straight upward in the middle of the tree. Making sure that this bough remains the leader takes a considerable amount of care. Usually this means nipping it very little (certainly less than any side branches), so as to promote its growth.

Branches that emerge laterally from the central leader should be spaced a few inches apart, and spread around the trunk. (That is, they should not occur two-in-a-row, one right on top of another.)

It's also usually a good practice to eliminate "crow's feet"—or forks—from the ends of all branches. This is especially important in the case of the central leader, which mustn't be allowed to choke itself off in a short, fan-shaped spray.

This piece, of course, is by no means intended to be adefinitive treatise on the subject of tree pruning. Never attempt to prune a large tree singlehanded. Limbs are often heavier than they appear . . . and if one gets out of hand, it could easily cause severe property damage and-or personal injury. Also bear in mind that a misstep while climbing a tall tree—or a momentary loss of balance while making a cut—can lead to disaster.

If you have any doubts about your ability to trim a tree, seek the services of a professional. (Look under "Tree Service" in the Yellow Pages.) A tree surgeon's fee may be high . . . but the alternative might be a long stay in the hospital.

Nonetheless, if you apply the basic rules I've set down here—with caution—you should find yourself next summer with a yard or orchard full of stronger, more beautiful, and healthier apple trees . . . each of which could easly be loaded with an extra bushel or two of juice red—or yellow-splotched bounty.

By LYNN and JOEL RAPP

Now that autumn is upon us, the indoor plants will be adjusting, just as we will. We must stop fertilizing our plants and allow them to rest until early spring. We are all mothers to our plants family and must provide seasons for them, as they become easily confused.

Move the plants away from the window pane. If the plants are touching glass, they will be negatively affected because glass is a conductor for heat and cold. Be aware of draughts near the windows. Soon the artificial heat will be turned on. Plants suffer in unnatural surroundings, so keep your house or apartment as cool as possible. Turn on the heat just enough to remove the chill and if you're out during the day, remember that the plants prefer it COOL. If it's too cool for you, put on a sweater and throw an extra blanket on your bed.

Just as plants droop and generally lose their vigor in overheated rooms, so do we. Heat is drying (our skin shows it, our sinuses act up), so provide as much humidity as possible when you must turn on the heat. The light situation changes also as winter comes on, so beware of these changes and prepare your plants' accordingly. Don't have great expectations for your green family during the winter months; they slow down when summer ends. Do not stimulate them. Just understand they are meditating and gathering energy . . . for you.
